Democrats 'Dared'

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Challenging the Democrats to nominate President Roosevelt, the Republican National Committee yesterday abandoned plans for a short campaign and set the next Republican National Convention for Philadelphia, June 24.

Philadelphia, for the first time in 40 years, was chosen the Republican convention city by a 66-to-30 runaway vote over Chicago after a well-heeled Keystone State delegation offered $200,000 cash and a hall free for the privilege.

It was a hard decision for Western committeemen who favored Chicago. But Mayor Edward Kelly, of the Windy City, the Kelly-Nash third term booster who walked off last week with the Democratic convention site, guaranteed Republicans "expenses only." Philadelphia's hard cash, plus a "rededication of American independence" plea, won.

Farley Ponders Date

Democrats are expected to meet a fortnight or so later, in Chicago. Chairman James A. Farley, empowered by the Democratic National Committee to fix their convention date, said in Miami yesterday he will set the time "in the next few days." Farley has out-waited the Republicans for the announced purpose of giving Democrats "last say" as to platform and candidate.

A third city entered its bid on the Republican auction bloc—Fargo, N. Dak. It received only two votes, although William Stern, North Dakota committeeman, told Republicans "We chase jackrabbits and catch them out there." Stern playfully offered the committee a blank check, 53 miles of improved streets and 20 hotels, "well protected by police."

At a closed morning meeting the Republican committee had agreed on the date—June 24—after three separate votes. An effort to postpone decision on a date until after the city was chosen was narrowly counted out. Then came a motion to meet July 1, so candidates might be named on Independence Day. This likewise was defeated after committeemen pointed to the competition from July 4 celebrations and Col. R. B. Creager, of Texas, wisecracked, "The President might change that date."

"We Have a Job to Do"

The committee then voted for June 24—a month earlier than was planned if the Democrats failed to jockey for position. "Forget about the Democratic date; we have a job to do," was the advice taken. Then leisurely, after lunch, the committee proceeded to select the city.

Committeemen during recesses were keenly speculative on the President's "third term" intentions but developed no bandwagon for any one of their own major prospects, well represented at the gathering. Like executive committeemen, meeting here last December,

Hectic Buying Boosts Wheat 5c a Bushel

(Other Market News, Pages 21, 22.)

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Feb. 16.—In one of the most hectic ten-minute trading periods of recent grain market history, wheat prices jumped abruptly almost 5 cents a bushel today just before the closing bell.

The market's action was all the more spectacular because the sudden rise caught dealers completely off guard. Every broker in the crowded pit was frantically trying to execute orders without knowing the reason for the sudden rush to buy.

After the final bell, with last trades as much as a cent apart in various sections of the pit, they scurried around for an answer to two question—who bought, and why?

Pit Caught Bare

The best explanation was that purchasing, which some said originated in the East, inspired by reports of heavy Canadian export business and good sales of United States Pacific Coast wheat, caught the pit bare of offerings shortly after 1 p. m. Prices had worked up from an early fractional decline and were resting slightly above previous closing levels.

As the advance got under way stop loss orders placed by previous short sellers were thrown into the pit, accelerating the upturn. May wheat did not stop until it reached $1.04½, up 4¾ over night and 5¼ cents from the early low. It was

Planners Back Sports Center For Capital

Approve Scheme For Stadium, Pool, 'Bowl,' Drill Field

By Gerald G. Gross
Post Staff Writer

The stage was set yesterday for one of the country's greatest stadium and sports center developments here in Washington.

The National Capital Park and Planning Commission gave its approval to the scheme, prepared by two consultants, which would give the city a stadium as large as the Yankees' and a vast recreation area for tennis, baseball, swimming, boating, skating and outdoor spectacles of all sorts.

Congress already has appropriated for the project's first unit, an armory for the National Guard. But funds and Congressional authorization have not been obtained for the elaborate play plant whose construction at the foot of East Capitol street was recommended yesterday by the planning body, whose chairman, Frederic A. Delano, is President Roosevelt's uncle.

Seats for 60,000

Yesterday's was the closing session of the commission's monthly meeting. The action favorable to the center was taken on a report submitted by Francis P. Sullivan and Bremer W. Pond, consultants. The former is a Washington architect. Pond is a professor of landscape architecture at Harvard.

The layout which they envisaged includes:

A stadium with an estimated capacity of 60,000, but which might be enlarged to accommodate 68,000 for, say, an Army-

Prison Vessel, Seized by British, Freed by Norway, Tries to Escape

By the United Press

Copenhagen, Denmark (Saturday), Feb. 17.—British and German warships were reported engaged in a running battle at several points off the Norwegian coast early today.

The fighting was said to be visible from shore and the firing plainly audible.

It was believed here that the British destroyer Intrepid and the German steamer Altmark, which reportedly carried prisoners taken from vessels sunk by the scuttled German pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee, may have figured in the sea battle.

Norwegians Interfere

The Intrepid yesterday seized the Altmark inside Norwegian territorial waters near Bergen, placed a prize crew aboard and was heading for the open sea when Norwegian warships arrived and compelled the British to restore the ship to German command.

With the Altmark thus safe in Norwegian territorial waters, the Intrepid reportedly took up position outside territorial waters and held the German ship under her guns, ready to engage the Altmark should she attempt to quit Norwegian waters.

When first word of the affair was received it was understood that naval forces of both Britain and Germany were rushing to the scene, the location of which correspondents were not allowed to reveal.

They evidently arrived much earlier than was expected because the reports said that British and German warships were engaged in a running battle along the coast. Reports of the battle came from several points in Norway.

London Denies Infringement

London, Saturday, Feb. 17 (U.P.)—Naval officials told the United Press today that the German ship Altmark was not attacked by a British destroyer in Norwegian waters.

"The version that the Altmark was attacked in Norwegian territorial waters is garbled," it was said.

The officials said they were able "approximately to confirm reports that there had been a running encounter between the Altmark and a British warship, but added:

"There is no question of stopping any ship inside foreign territorial waters. The Altmark may have been questioned inside territorial waters, however.

"The version that the Altmark was 'captured' inside Norwegian waters is not correct in its details."

The officials said they could not make a "positive" statement now

Finland's Chiefs Reported Ready For London Trip To Beseech Help

By Verner Forchammer,
International News Service Staff Writer

Copenhagen, Feb. 16.—The foreign ministers of Denmark, Sweden and Norway, it was announced tonight, will meet in Copenhagen next Saturday and Sunday, February 24 and 25, to discuss mutual problems arising from Europe's two wars.

The momentous conference may knit the three Scandinavian countries closer together in concerted measures to save their neutrality from the multiplying perils besetting them from all sides.

The increased sinking of Scandinavian ships by German submarine and mine action and the situation created by the Soviet offensive in Finland were expected to form the two foremost subjects for consideration.

Plea to Allies Expected

At the same time it was reliably reported here that Finnish Premier Risto Ryti and Foreign Minister Vaino A. Tanner are planning to go to London by airplane tomorrow or Sunday in quest of immediate military help from Britain and France.

It was reported they might warn the British government that in view of Sweden's refusal to rush aid to Finland, the Finnish forces cannot hold out much longer against the Russians' overwhelmingly superior numbers.

With the Scandinavian countries dependent largely on their maritime trade for their existence, their growing ship losses were threatening seriously to dislocate their economic systems. Denmark and Norway disclosed today that protests had been sent to Berlin against the sinkings of their ships.

May Make Joint Protest

While official quarters withheld details of the forthcoming conference, informed Copenhagen circles discussed the possibility of a joint Swedish-Danish-Norwegian declaration of protest to Germany.

At the same time, it was considered probable that the foreign ministers in behalf of their countries may also issue a joint proclamation reaffirming their neutrality and determination to help each other preserve it.

The Scandinavian foreign ministers are correspondingly expected to decide against permitting passage of large foreign forces across their territories to Finland.

Finns Doomed, Germans Say; Blame British

Spring Defeat Sure, Hitler Paper Says; Warns Scandinavia

By Otto D. Tolischus

Berlin, Feb. 16.—Finland is doomed because instead of yielding to Russian military preponderance it preferred to depend upon the empty promises of the western democracies who now are leaving it in the lurch, is the cold German analysis of the Russo-Finnish situation. An equally cool warning is issued to the Scandinavian countries in an authoritative article in Adolph Hitler's Voelkischer Beobachter today.

It is the first German pronouncement on the Russo-Finnish conflict since that war broke out November 30, and its authoritative character is demonstrated both by its display and its reprint in other German newspapers.

It also comes on the heels of Col. Gen. Walther von Brauchitsch's military inspection tour in Danzig, which is the German answer to the establishment of Finnish recruiting offices in England, and a warning note strongly underlined by German official quarters.

To Frighten Nordics

The obvious primary purpose of the article is to keep Scandinavian countries from rendering help to Finland or permitting any outside help to pass through them.

The article also continues the process of hammering neutrals into what is called here total neutrality, which in the words of Propaganda Minister Dr. Joseph Goebbels permits no distinction between the neutrality of government and neutrality of public opinions or private agencies.

Ever since one hefty German press article overthrew Rickard Sandler, the former foreign minister of Sweden, this hammering process was applied particularly to Scandinavia, though larger neutrals were carefully left alone.

The article acknowledges that the Finnish soldier possesses high physi-

Sweden Balks At Finn Plea For Open Aid

Helsinki Hints Defeat Looms, Sees Grave Result for Neighbor

By Elmer W. Peterson

Stockholm, Feb. 16.—Sweden formally refused to send direct military help to Finland today, leaving Finland faced, diplomatic observers believed, with the choice of a despairing appeal to the western powers for troops or a dangerous peace with Soviet Russia.

Premier Per Albin Hansson, through the medium of an official communique, said that Finland's request for "transport of Swedish military groups to Finland" had been declined; that Sweden stood by Hansson's Riksdag declaration of January 17 to the effect that her aid to Finland would be limited to all material and humanitarian help possible.

Diplomatic sources predicted that Finland, desperately pressed by a great Russian offensive against the Mannerheim Line, might now make a direct request for formal military assistance to Great Britain and France, and that Sweden and Norway would be asked to permit passage of the Allied troops and munitions.

At the same time the Stockholm Newspaper Folkets Dagblad said Finnish leaders had informed Sweden they would have to turn to the western powers if Sweden declined military aid—or else make a peace with the Soviets—"on conditions greatly concerning Sweden."

Skeptical of Allied Aid

A Swedish foreign office spokesman said Sweden "naturally never could tolerate a march through by troops of a foreign country." He added Great Britain and France had forwarded no such demands. Moreover, informed Stockholm observers were skeptical as to whether any practical military aid could get to Finland from the western powers.

In London, reliable British spokesmen were quick to point out it would be difficult, technically, for

Helsinki's Fliers Hit Back in Raid On Red Railway Line to Leningrad

By Thomas F. Hawkins.
Associated Press Staff Writer

Helsinki, Feb. 16.—The Soviet army, with 500 planes supporting a tremendous land attack, has crashed ahead to dearly-bought gains at three places along Finland's Mannerheim Line on the Karelian Isthmus, tonight's Finnish army communique acknowledged.

It was the second time in three days that the Russian mass drive was acknowledged to have made a dent in the main Finnish fortifications.

[Two Finnish towns, Leipasuo and Kàmara, 5 miles north and northeast of Summa, were reported by the Leningrad military headquarters to have been captured by Red army forces, together with 22 more Finnish fortifications.

[Finnish planes were reported to have bombed the railroad connecting Leningrad with the Karelian Isthmus, over which Russian army supplies have been moved. Several stations were set afire, a Reuters (British news agency) dispatch said.—Editor's note.]

A military informant admitted that the Red army had captured part of the village of Summa, which has seen the fiercest fighting of the 16-day-old isthmus battle.

He said the Russians were in Summa on February 13 and presumably still were there. This "Verdun" of the Russian-Finnish war, now demolished by shellfire, lies only 20 miles southeast of Viipuri, Finland's second largest city and apparent immediate objective of the Russian onslaught.

Attackers' Losses Heavy

As in previous days, tonight's communique spoke of heavy Russian losses as the cost of the great Red offensive, in which the Finns say the invaders have been mowed down "like wheat." But more men, and more guns and more airplanes keep coming.

The Russian aerial concentration on the isthmus yesterday, with 500 planes taking part, was the greatest of any day since the attack started, and the official report significantly noted the bombardment of Finnish troops along with attacks on Riihimaki, Viipuri and Lappenranta in which 34 persons were killed and 60 injured.

There was no question of any sudden collapse of the Finnish defense, Finnish military men said, but the tremendous pressure of the attacks put a heavy strain on every Finn fighter.

Positions Pierced

Tonight's communique, covering activity of yesterday, said this of the isthmus fighting:

"Enemy attacks continued on February 15. The severest pressure occurred between Hatjalahdenjarvi and the Vuoksi River and at Taipale.

"East of the Summa sector and at a couple of points on the defile between Lake Muolo and the Vuoksi the enemy succeeded in penetrating to our positions.

"Elsewhere the attacks were repulsed.

"Northeast of Lake Ladoga enemy attacks were repulsed both among the islands and on shore. Our forces captured one of the enemy's positions. Enemy losses were heavy.

"At Kuhmo, destruction of isolated enemy detachments continued. Elsewhere nothing new.

"On February 15 our fighter planes

Admiral Simons was advised that the cruiser's main engines were not functioning. The position of the ship was not divulged.

Legion Post Entertains 500 At Biggest Blood Bank Party

With more than 500 tickets sold, Washington Gas Light Co. Post No. 44, American Legion, last night gave the largest party so far for the Children's Hospital blood and serum bank fund.

Other parties still in prospect or already given and not yet reported on are looked to for support in The Post-WJSV "party drive" to raise funds for continuance of the hospital blood bank. Reports still were lacking from the majority of Legion parties given in the last ten days. More than $1,500 has been raised to date.

Last night's Gas Light Post party filled the utility's display room at 411 Tenth street northwest and overflowed into adjacent offices. For those who did not play bridge, other games including chess, checkers, Chinese checkers and monopoly were set up.

Music was furnished during the party, amplified by a public address system. Although no official scores were kept at the various games, many door prizes were offered by persons and firms interested in the drive and were awarded during the party.

Among persons prominent in the blood bank drive who were present were James Lemon, general drive chairman, and Mrs. Lemon; Lieut. Comdr. W. A. 11 Witnesses Will Testify on Baby Traffic; Law Sought to Safeguard Mothers' Privacy

District Committee Pledges Thorough Inquiry, Remedy

This is the seventh in a series on baby brokers.

By Lucia Giddens.

Eleven witnesses will be called next week to give Congress information about the District's baby brokerage business, it was announced last night by Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, chairman of the District subcommittee on police affairs.

Schulte's announcement followed receipt of a report from Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, made at the District Committee's request after publication of the first of The Washington Post's series this week on the baby-placement business.

It was understood that one of the witnesses will tell of a case where a white infant was given temporarily to a colored couple, the child having been obtained from an unmarried mother by a colored baby broker. The child now is in an asylum.

"We're going to get to the bottom of this business," and if it's legislation that is needed to correct con-

"It's all within the law." That refrain has harassed social workers here for years as they have sought to protect babies in the District from commercial or casual placements.

At last they dare to hope that something may be done about it. A proposed bill for licensing child-placing agencies is being pushed through preliminary stages toward hoped-for consideration in Congress at this session.

But the social workers realize that something more than a law is necessary—that more services for the unmarried mother must be provided to take the place of commercial or haphazard treatment of the problem.

The group of social workers and citizens at work on the draft of the legislation has striven to plug any loopholes which might allow the informal disposing of babies—along with prevention of large scale commercialism.

The tentative draft by the committee, headed by Mrs. Herbert N. Budlong, provides that no person other than the parents, guardian or relative within the second degree and no firm, corporation, association or agency other than a licensed child-placing agency may place or assist or arrange for placement of a child in a family home or for adoption. An agency would be prohibited from receiving fees from persons adopting children.

When the child is given up, the relinquishment shall be a written statement signed before two substantiating witnesses and acknowledged before a representative of the child-placing agency and recorded and

Garner Files In California, Recalls 1932

Threw Delegation Votes to Nominate Roosevelt First Time

Vice President Garner announced yesterday that he would enter the Democratic primary in California, seeking to duplicate his 1932 feat of winning the California delegation's support for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

In a telegram to Garner-for-President Club leaders, the Vice President said their action in entering his name in the May 7 preferential primary in California had his "full approval."

The telegram was addressed to Zach Lamar Cobb, of Los Angeles and William H. Wallace, jr., of San Francisco. They previously had written Garner that it was "the prevailing belief that California will be yours by an even greater majority" than in 1932 when the State's delegates were instructed for Garner for President.

Garner Pleased

"I am pleased to acknowledge your telegram of today advising that my friends in California, acting through the California Garner-for-President organization, propose to enter my name as a candidate in the May Presidential primary election," Garner telegraphed Cobb and Wallace.

"This has my full approval since it is in conformity with my public announcement a few weeks ago in which I expressed the opinion that the Democratic candidate should be selected at the primaries and conventions. I recall with deep appreciation that I was the choice of California Democrats in a similar primary election in 1932 and I am, of course, grateful for their continued confidence in me."

Cobb and Wallace said in their letter that the Garner committee in California already was obtaining expressions from Democratic Party members as to their preference for Garner delegates.

Yielded to Roosevelt

Garner's entry in California recalled the incident of the 1932 Democratic National Convention when Garner and former Senator McAdoo, of California, threw the support of the California and Texas delegations, totaling 90 votes, to President Roosevelt and assured his nomination. Texas has 46 votes and California 44 in the convention.

Mrs. Clare Driscoll, Democratic national committeewoman for Texas and co-chairman of the National Garner-for-President committee, visited the Vice President here yesterday.

"I am firmly convinced that Mr. Garner will be the Democratic nominee and our next President," she said.

Prepare to Enter Roosevelt's

Harrisburg, Pa., Feb. 16 (AP).—The name of President Roosevelt will be entered in the Pennsylvania Presidential preferential primary April 23, Democratic State Chairman David L. Lawrence announced today. Petitions are being prepared.

The State committe indorsed the President for a third term early this month.

Strife in Nebraska

Omaha, Neb., Feb. 16 (AP).—Republican Party harmony in Nebraska appeared threatened today as petitions were put in circulation to place the name of Thomas E. Dewey on the State Presidential preference ballot April 9.

Charles S. Reed, manager for Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, declared Vandenberg petitions already were signed and would be filed if Dewey's name goes on the ballot.

members appeared predominantly in favor of unpledged delegations.

G. O. P. wheelhorses mostly were interested in whom they will have to beat—in whether the President is going to run. Some hoped, others feared that he would. Only one predicted openly to reporters that he would not—Jay Cooke, Philadelphia Republican city committee chairman.

An address by Chairman John Hamilton highlighted a strong note of reassurance on Republican prospects, and a "dare" to the President to run.

"We can't select him, and their convention date, too," taunted Hamilton. "But if we had the power, the greatest service we could render this country would be to nominate as the Democratic candidate Franklin D. Roosevelt. Then we would have a clear-cut issue and once and for all we would have a showdown on the New Deal; Franklin Roosevelt and the third term—and we would finish off all three."

To this, Miami dispatches said Farley replied that the public "is not going to pay any attention to Mr. Hamilton's utterances.

Heading for Florida on a Southern speech-making tour, Frank Gannett, Rochester (N. Y.) publisher, and announced Republican candidate, took the same view as Hamilton.

"It would be the quickest and surest way to get rid of him, not only as President but as a menace to the restoration of the Democratic Party to its true principles and its honored leadership of the past," said Gannett.

But there were others, including Edward F. Colladay, national committeeman for the District, who thought the President would be "the hardest Democrat to beat, though I believe we could lick him." Colladay said he thought Republicans would win easily over another candidate."

Dewey Boosters Present

Despite open activity for several Republican entries by their representatives at the meeting, there was little talk by committeemen of individual G. O. P. candidates. Among those present and boosting the stock of Thomas E. Dewey, New York district attorney, was Russell Sprague, his manager, and Theodore Roosevelt, jr., adviser.

Senator Taft, of Ohio, had boosters present in the persons of David S. Ingalls, his manager, and John Marshall, Southern representative. Immediately after the convention city choice, Ingalls announced Taft will open convention headquarters at the Bellevue-Stratford, in Philadelphia.

Declared Ingalls: "Ohio's delegates, pledged solidly to Taft, will form the nucleus of the convention activity with the broadening support of many other States which have been swinging into the Taft column."

Although friends of Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, Gov. James, of New York, and others in the running talked shop in the hallways, Republican committeemen, like their Democratic opponents, bedecked them, centered their curiosity on the plans of one man—President Roosevelt.

Typical was the comment of Gannett, who said he would support "whoever may be the Republican nominee," and of Mrs. Bertha Baur, of Illinois, who said: "I am for anyone who can win."

Committee business was performed with harmonious briskly united action except when Robert R. Church, of Tennessee, moved to set aside $100,000 for "gathering of factual data and publicizing the same, on matters pertaining to the Negro citizen as they affect his political and economic security." The committee first tabled the Church resolution, but, as objections were heard, later referred the proposed appropriation to the executive committee.

Dr. Frank Submits Report

Earlier, the committee had received from Dr. Glenn Frank, former Wisconsin University president, the report of the G. O. P. program committee, two years in the making. It will be released for publication Monday morning. The Church resolution complained the report lacked "any suggestion useful in the formation of a constructive program upon which an appeal can be made to the colored voters in the forthcoming campaign."

Other business:

Hamilton presented a financial statement by C. B. Goodspeed, treasurer, showing the committee has wiped out the $678,242 debt owed on January 1 and now has a cash balance on hand of $9,283.

The following new committeemen were elected to fill vacancies: B. L. Noojin, Gadsden, Ala.; J. Leonard Replogle, Palm Beach, Fla.; Hill Blackett, Chicago; Daniel Whetstone, Cut Bank, Mont.; Lyle Jackson, Neligh, Nebr.; Mrs. Lindsay Patterson, Winston-Salem, N. C., and Representative Reece, of Tennessee.

First Since 1900

In winning the June 24 convention for Philadelphia for the first time since President McKinley was nominated there in 1900, the Pennsylvania city, nosed out by Chicago on its Democratic convention bid, presented an imposing array of speakers.

Mason Owlett, Pennsylvania national committeeman, presented in turn, Mayor Robert Lambertson of Philadelphia; Jay Cooke, Mrs. Worthington Scranton, Republican national committeewoman, and Senator Davis. Mrs. Scranton said Republicans could go out from the "cradle of liberty" city as "missionaries disseminating the spirit of Americanism" after "rededicating themselves to the principles of a free government."

"Central location" advantages of Chicago were stressed by Hill Blackett, Illinois committeeman; Mrs. Baur, committeewoman; William Kelly, of the Chicago Association of Commerce, and finally Mayor Kelly.

Mayor Kelly made clear he was not going to pass or even match the Philadelphia offer. (He matched Philadelphia's $125,000 to win the Democratic convention.) He guaranteed only to pay "all of the legitimate expenses of the convention." When Col. Creager sounded him out on $175,000 for expenses, he merely repeated his original offer. Philadelphia had won.

Sees G O. P. Victory

Hamilton in his opening charge said the Republican Party will "at once assume the role of majority leadership and take the initiative." He said the Democrats had shown basic weakness by waiting for Republicans to move first in choice of candidate and program.

"After seven years of New Deal debt, demagoguery and defeatism, the American people applaud this change in leadership," Hamilton said.

He said such economic improvement as has taken place since 1932 has been "in spite of the New Deal."

"And now," he said, "this regime would torpedo another tradition—the tradition that no man, irrespective of how great he is, shall fill the Presidential chair longer than eight years. Their own words confess their lack of candidates."

Hamilton said the Democratic Party is demoralized and embittered by internecine feuds," that it cannot present a common front, while "our ranks are closed in harmonious understanding."

"Wherever we look, all signs point to a Republican victory," he concluded.

G. O. P. Trend All Over Nation Reported by Committeemen

Fletcher, Once Chairman, Asserts Session Is Most Enthusiastic Ever Held; Sees No Doubt of Verdict in November

By Hedley Donovan,
Post Staff Writer

Trends, some "noticeable," some "striking," some "emphatic" but all Republican, are loose in the country. That, at least, is the report on the state of the Nation brought to Washington yesterday by nearly 100 members of the Republican National Committee.

No State, it developed, is so small or sparsely populated that it cannot support at least one full-fledged trend toward the G. O. P.

From Reno, Nav., came word that 300 Republicans had dined together at a Lincoln's Birthday banquet, while only 200 citizens turned out for the Democratic rally on Jackson Day. This news was circulated through the Willard Hotel by Noble Getchell, of Reno, who held the proxies of Nevada's two committee members.

KNOWLAND

The youngest Republican committeeman, 32-year-old William Knowland, of California, reported a swing toward "sanity" in Pacific Coast politics.

"We beat 'ham and-eggs' by 150,000 votes in 1938 and by nearly a million last year," the bulky young publisher pointed out. "That is a pretty clear indication that California does not plan to be the guinea pig for the experiments of the rest of the country.

Knowland said his State's delegation to the Philadelphia convention will be uninstructed. California is looking for a candidate who "can make a constructive campaign, something more than carping criticism," he declared.

FLETCHER

Henry P. Fletcher, his rough-finish tweed suit set off by a pearl gray vest, called yesterday's gathering "the most enthusiastic national committee meeting we've ever had." Fletcher, former Ambassador to Italy, was chairman of the national committee from 1934 to 1936. He now is a committeeman from Rhode Island.

"Reports from all over the country show a decided Republican trend," he said. "If these reports are any indication, there can be no doubt about the country's verdict in November."

The G. O. P. "is coming right up—fast," according to Samuel F. Pryor, jr., of Connecticut. Pryor, who is vice president of the American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co., was impressed by "the spirit of unity" at the committee meeting."

PRYOR

Republican gains in 1938 represented "the biggest swing in American politics in 50 years," he declared. "We won again last year, and we're going to win this year," he said.

Connecticut's delegation at Philadelphia is not likely to be committed in advance to any particular candidate, Pryor believes. "We want a man who can win," he announced, "and a man who can carry the tremendous load after he has won. The job will be to bring the country back to normal and give work to people through a Government friendly to industry."

Hill Blackett, of Illinois, said "the Republican trend in recent elections will bring a 300,000 majority for the Republican Party to the Cook County (Chicago) line" next November.

"That's more of a majority than even Cook County can overcome," he said, "regardless of stuffed ballot boxes."

Edward F. Colladay, who represents the voteless District of Columbia on the G. O. P. committee, mentioned no specific trends but predicted a "smashing victory."

Appointment Of West Stirs 3d-Term Talk

Post Permits Him To Boom President Despite Hatch Act

By Felix Cotten.

Speculation over President Roosevelt's third term attitude flared again yesterday when it was learned that former Representative Charles O. West, the President's personal political representative in Ohio, had been appointed to a $7,500-a-year job on the Processing Tax Board of Review.

The appointment was made by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau several days ago. The Processing Tax Board of Review is an obscure Treasury agency set up under the 1936 Revenue Act to review cases in which the internal revenue commissioner refuses to allow processing tax refunds.

Political observers speculated as to whether West's Treasury berth will be a means of enabling him to work for a third term while on the Government pay roll, in view of provisions of the Hatch Act. He has been active recently in stimulating third-term sentiment in Ohio.

Since, under the law, appointments to the Processing Tax Board of Review must be made from persons already employed by the Treasury, West was placed on the Treasury pay roll by Morgenthau a short time before he was given his new job, it was learned.

William Schwartz, board chairman, said last night that West's appointment was "news to me." He understood, he said, that a new member of the board was to be appointed, but did not know who was to be given the place.

Schwartz said the board had handled about 260 cases since it was created.

The Supreme Court in January, 1936, invalidated the processing taxes, levied to pay crop control benefits to farmers, and ordered the millions of dollars which had been collected refunded to processors of farm commodities. The 1938 Revenue Act provided that refunds should be made only if processor could prove that he had not passed the tax on in the form of increased prices.

Blocked by Morgenthau

West two years ago was boomed for the position of Comptroller of the Currency, but Morgenthau immediately made clear at a press conference that West was not acceptable.

A frequent White House caller in the last few weeks, West was the central figure in a move, said to have the backing of Ohio Democrat leaders, to persuade the President to enter his name in the Ohio preference primary in May at which the State's 52 delegates to the Democratic National Convention will be chosen. The President vetoed the idea, however.

Later, West conferred with the President on a plan whereby the State's delegation would be instructed to vote for Senator Donahey as a favorite son candidate, but would switch to the President at once if third-term sentiment developed. Donahey is reported to have vehemently refused to assume a role as "stalking horse."

Ohio Democratic leaders are now said to be working on a plan where Donahey would be "drafted" as a favorite son candidate. The State's delegates, however, would be New Dealers.

Frozen Out by Ickes

West, a former college professor, was elected to Congress in 1931. In 1933, he became a candidate against Donahey for the Democratic Senatorial nomination, but was defeated. The President then made him his liaison officer at the Capitol.

As a reward for his work in this capacity, he was appointed Undersecretary of the Interior, a $10,000-a-year job. He was to continue, however, his contact work at the Capitol.

He immediately got into disagreement with Secretary of the Interior Ickes. West some time later went to the Pacific Coast, and when he returned three months later he found that Ickes had taken over his office and staff. He was left only with one confidential clerk. His resignation followed.

Roosevelt Orders Blizzard Relief In New England

Aboard U. S. S. Lang, at Sea, Feb. 16 (AP via Wireless).—President Roosevelt today approved a series of emergency projects to meet blizzard and storm damages in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

Brig. Gen. Edwin M. Watson, Presidential Secretary and Military Aide, said the Chief Executive sent his approval from the cruiser Tuscaloosa immediately after receiving a request from John Carmody, Federal Works Administrator.

Beyond that, Gen. Watson said there was "nothing to report," as the President sailed through a warm, choppy sea, his exact whereabouts and destination a carefully guarded secret.

Congress has a new philosophy—based on reason and producing economy — says Representative Ludlow (Democrat), of Indiana.

LUDLOW

Tossing compliments to the House Appropriations Committee for lopping $111,700,000 from the naval budget and $286,000,000 from six other supply bills, he predicted that Congressmen in a few years would be "wondering where our sanity was" when a single session's appropriations — last year — were three times the cost of the Civil War.

He added that if economy is supplemented by a policy of noninterference with business, the new philosophy "will bring the country up on its feet."

D. Harold McGrath, secretary to Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), Washington, yesterday was appointed superintendent of the Senate Gallery used by radio correspondents. Schwellenbach announced Miss Edith McDonald, of Spokane, a member of his staff, had been named secretary to succeed McGrath.

Representative Ditter (Republican), of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill that would sharply limit Federal power over radio stations.

"By claiming the power to censure radio programs" the Federal Communications Commission is violating "the intent of Congress and the Bill of Rights," Ditter charged.

His bill would require the FCC to hold public hearings, before suspension of a broadcasting license could be ordered, to give private stations the same chance as Government stations in obtaining frequencies, and to grant licenses for a minimum period of three years.

Robert B. Perkman, secretary to Senator Holman (Republican), Oregon, said Holman had been in Walter Reed Hospital for a week for a physical check-up but that he would return to his office Monday. He said Holman was carrying on his work while in the hospital.

Wisconsin Vote May Provide 3d-Term Test

Garner-Roosevelt Choice to Be Offered In April 2 Primary

By the Associated Press

Madison, Wis., Feb. 16.—Wisconsin's political testing ground, which was fertile soil for President Roosevelt in 1932 and 1936, may provide the first direct answer to what the electors are thinking about a third term.

The Badger State rates 24 delegates to the Democratic National Convention, but 48 candidates—divided into two groups—are scrapping for a chance to go to Chicago to cast their votes for renomination of the President.

Garner vs. Roosevelt

The Wisconsin Presidential primary, to be held April 2, is potentially the first affording the opportunity for a clear-cut decision between Mr. Roosevelt and Vice President Garner.

The Garner movement, backed by some influential Democrats, is being conducted with the Vice President's consent. The two-way drive to draft Mr. Roosevelt is being staged by rival Democratic groups in this land of the LaFollettes without the President's sanction. His acceptance, under Wisconsin law, is not necessary.

There may be another election slate pledged to Paul V. McNutt on an assumption that the President would not accept a third term.

United States Senator Robert M. LaFollette, jr., who will come up for re-election next November, and his brother, Philip, have remained unusually quiet about Presidential prospects, although the votes of their Progressive followers contributed heavily toward M. Roosevelt's success in the last two campaigns. Their own party, the National Progressives of America, has no White House candidate in sight.

State Politics Plays Part

The "draft Roosevelt" drive has been intermingled with State politics.

One group of Democrats, dissatisfied with State party leaders, formed "the Democratic Party organization of Wisconsin" and put up a slate of delegate candidates pledged to nominate the President or anyone he selected.

National Committeeman Charles E. Broughton then called a conference which offered an "official" slate of Roosevelt pledged candidates.

State Chairman William D. Carroll, meanwhile, expressed opposition to a third term and the Garner supporters said they were proceeding on the theory the President would not accept the nomination if it were offered to him.

Inquiry Is Urged Into Job Problem

A thorough study of reasons for unemployment among men more than 40 years old was urged last night by Dr. William Downs, president of "Americans Over Forty," at a meeting of the organization in Epiphany parish house, 1317 G street northwest.

Such a survey should be the immediate objective of the group, Dr. Downs said. He described it as "the alpha chapter of what we hope becomes a national organization." Executives in all lines of business have expressed interest in the group, he said.

Police Number Held Too Low For D.C. Safety

Stricker Suggests Transfer to Traffic From Other Duties

Washington lacks sufficient man power in its police and traffic departments to carry on successfully a program of highway safety and traffic-control, and it needs more rigorous prosecution of traffic cases, according to Paul F. Stricker, field service director of the National Safety Council.

Stricker recently visited Washington at the request of the Traffic Advisory Council to conduct a comprehensive study of local conditions. His findings were published yesterday by the American Automobile Association.

The District, Stricker reported, has only half as many men assigned to traffic engineering studies as other cities of comparable size entered in the council's annual traffic safety contest.

"A Halfway Job"

"As a consequence," he said, "only a halfway job is done. The city needs more man power to do more work."

In the number of policemen assigned to traffic enforcement work, Washington ranks far below other cities in its population class, Stricker said.

Stricker suggested officers be transferred from other duties to augment traffic patrols and added:

"While there is always the possibility that crime may increase when men are taken from crime prevention, we believe that a study of crime costs in Washington contrasted with the cost of traffic accidents will show here, as has been shown in other cities, that the traffic accident loss requires a greater portion of the total facilities of the police department."

Stricker recalled that Congress in 1936 was asked to increase the local police force 10 per cent.

Investigation Urged

"Since this recommendation was made," Stricker observed, "we understand that the police personnel has been increased 4 per cent of the 10 and that no account was taken of the change in motor vehicle registration."

Stricker suggested more intensive investigations of fatal accidents and urged that the Washington Criminal Justice Association delve deeply into the handling of death-crash cases in court.

"We would suggest also," the report stated, "that a traffic court be established which will handle traffic cases only and that, in view of the present practice of changing judges and prosecutors monthly, a comparative record be kept of monthly performance."

Stricker described Washington's pedestrian situation as "unusually serious." Although he favored the present system of pedestrian control, he emphasized that traffic engineering projects must make compliance with the rules "easy and safe."

A boat house, more than 60 acres of auto parking space, widened streets to facilitate the flow of traffic and various other embellishments.

Randolph Offers Bill

Recommended for several years by the planning commission, the East Capitol street project only last year got its actual start when funds were allotted for the armory. Representative Jennings Randolph, chairman of the House District Committee, recently introduced a commission-approved bill authorizing the stadium and sports center development.

Sullivan and Pond did not estimate what the entire project would cost, nor does the Randolph bill mention the proposed outlay:

The consultants recommended that Oklahoma avenue be widened to a double roadway and Twenty-second street, between B and C streets southeast, be made 120 feet in width.

Scant Hope of Funds

The armory is being built directly north of District Jail and the proposed stadium would go directly north of the armory, facing Eastern High School. The drill field, playing areas and parking zones would lie along the Kingman Lake front, extending roughly from B street southeast to Benning road northeast.

With an economy-minded Congress, there is but scant hope that any funds will be made available this year to start the development.

The planning commission took under consideration a request by Rear Admiral Ben Moreell, chief of the Navy Bureau of Yards and Docks, that provision be made for an Army and Navy Club clubhouse in the Northwest rectangle, where the new War and Navy Department buildings are to be erected.

The commission directed its technical staff to co-operate with the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the regional planning board on revision of the general airport plan for Washington and nearby States.

Other action included approval of a report by John Nolen, jr., planning director, which stated that land acquisition for Fort drive will be completed by July 1; approval of the location of a proposed State Department annex where the old Court of Claims Building now stands at Seventeenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, and instruction of the staff to co-operate with the Virginia State Planning Board on zoning reforms.

Fire Damages 10 D.C. Homes; 50 Flee in Cold

Flue Blaze Spreads Along Block in Myrtle Street N.E.

Residents of the first block Myrtle street northeast were back in their homes last night, cleaning up after a three-alarm blaze swept through 10 two-story homes in the block early yesterday.

More than 50 persons were routed by flames which damaged houses numbered from 26 through 44. Flames spread along adjoining front roof cornices and were shooting well above the houses when the first apparatus arrived.

An unidentified passerby turned in an alarm when fire was noticed in 38 and 40 Myrtle street. Thick smoke and the stiff wind which fanned the blaze prompted the first firemen to arrive to sound the other alarms.

Occupants of the houses fled to the street in various stages of undress. Some carried furniture and clothing in their arms and piled it on the sidewalk.

Origin of the fire had not been definitely determined last night but police said they believed it was caused by a defective flue. Nos. 38 and 40 Myrtle street were most seriously damanegd, flames spreading through the entire second floors.

In the other homes the fire was confined to the cornices and roofs. No estimate was given of the amount of damage.

None was injured.

Epidemic? Yes, Of Colds, Parran Says, Including His

Through his wife, who was at his bedside, he confirmed the fact that such infections are prevalent all over the country generally, not only from the South—where reports of a "super" epidemic emanated—but he stated there is nothing extraordinary about it considering the severe winter. He asked his wife to please point out that not even the head of the Public Health Service escaped being hit.

Genesis Beats Science in Court But Old Query Is Unanswered

Judge Rules Atheist Failed to Prove Pastor Had Offered $1,000 Reward For Scientific Evidence Bible Errs

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 16.—After listening for two days to a renewal of arguments that have raged since man first gave thought to his own origin and that of the world in which he lives, a municipal court justice today dismissed a $1,000 action based on the scientific accuracy or inaccuracy of the Bible.

The first chapter of the Book of Genesis was one of the principal points at issue between opposing lawyers in the suit brought by William Floyd, publisher of the magazine the Arbitrator, against the Rev. Harry Rimmer, evangelist and defender of the Bible's scientific correctness.

Floyd alleged that Rimmer offered $1,000 to anyone who could prove any scientific inaccuracies in the Bible, that he (Floyd) produced 51 and that Rimmer refused to pay him the reward.

$1,000 Offered Not Proved

Justice Benjamin Halleck, who heard the case without a jury, dismissed the suit on the ground a prima facie case had not been established. He ruled that Floyd had failed to prove that Rimmer had inserted an advertisement in a morning newspaper offering $1,000 for proof of Biblical inaccuracies from a scientific viewpoint, or that he had any knowledge of its insertion.

The principal witness today was Wolsey Teller, vice president of the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism, who described himself as an editor, scientist and writer on astronomy, anthropology and biology.

He said scientists disagreed with the first chapter of Genesis—the story of creation.

"Science," he said, "does not recognize the words 'created' or 'made' because they involve a maker. The consensus of science is that the earth evolved by evolution."

Teller testified, among other things, that the earth was two thousand million years old and was round, not flat. He said "no one was there" when the earth was created "but the theory is that two stars were close together and the larger star threw out a film which condensed into several planets and one of them is the earth." The stars, he added, "came from the nebulae."

Man, testified Teller, began with the veriebrates and now "is an evolved ape."

Doesn't Believe in God

These theories, Teller declared, did not conform to the story in the first chapter of Genesis nor to the biblical story that the earth was created in six days.

"Do you believe in God?" Teller was asked by James A. Bennett, lawyer for Rimmer.

"No, sir," replied the witness.

"And all your testimony is given from the viewpoint of a man who doesn't believe in God?"

"From the viewpoint of science which has brought me to the viewpoint there is no God," snapped Teller.

Teller asserted he did not "believe in heaven, or hell, or a future life, nor future punishment, for that matter."

"You get your punishment in court," he said. "I don't believe in sin. There is no such thing as a Supreme Being. There are moral laws made by men, not by a Supreme Being."

Heated Exchange Halts Testimony Of Pressman

By the United Press

A House Labor Committee hearing on proposed Wagner Act amendments was recessed hurriedly yesterday after an angry exchange between Representative Clare Hoffman (Republican), Michigan, bitter C. I. O. foe, and Lee Pressman, general counsel for the C. I. O.

Hoffman insisted that the C. I. O. counsel answer a question by Representative Thomas (Democrat), Texas.

"I'll answer the question all right, Mr. Hoffman," Pressman said heatedly. "Representative Thomas can take care of himself."

Jumping up, Hoffman shouted, "This boy is not going to tell me what to ask."

"I won't take this from Pressman," he said, looking directely at the attorney. "Remember that!"

As Representative Keller (Democrat), Illinois, acting chairman, gaveled for order, Pressman said, "I'll remember all I say."

"You keep a civil tongue in your head," Hoffman cried.

Exchange Sued For Securities Whitney Stole

$127,785 Is Asked By Customer for Embezzled Holdings

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 16.—The spectacular Wall Street collapse of Richard Whitney, one-time president of the New York Stock Exchange, developed another sequel today when the exchange was sued in Federal court for recovery of $127,785.50 worth of securities which Whitney took from a customer's brokerage account to pledge as collateral for a personal loan.

Attorneys for the plaintiff, Mrs. Mary Stevens Baird, New York and Bernardsville, N. J., social registerite, said they believed this was the first suit of its kind under the SEC Act of 1934, and added:

"A noval point of law is involved, namely, whether the exchange is liable under these circumstances to a customer for losses resulting from the misconduct of an exchange member."

The complaint named John Dessau, treasurer of the exchange, as defendant. The exchange, the complaint charged, failed to take disciplinary action against Whitney and his firm, Richard Whitney & Co., in November, 1937, when it allegedly first became aware of his practices.

Whitney pleaded guilty to grand larceny nearly two years ago and was sent to Sing Sing Prison for 2½ to 5 years. His probation report indicated that his financial troubles began when he lost $2,000,000 in the 1929 stock market crash.

Mrs. Baird had maintained a large account with the Whitney firm for several years. In a statement he issued after his indictment, Whitney admitted that he had used securities belonging to Mrs. Baird and others as collateral.

Registration of the exchange under the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, Mrs. Baird's complaint declared, bound the exchange—described as an unincorporated association of more than seven members—to comply with and to enforce compliance by its members with provisions of the act.

The exchange failed to take action, the complaint continued, even when it learned on November 24, 1937, that Whitney and not only embezzled over $700,000 worth of securities belonging to the exchange's gratuity fund, but had violated the provisions of the Securities Act.

Whitney, the complaint charged, had sent Mrs. Baird false financial statements which concealed his embezzlements.

Nazis Seeking World Power, Says Dr. Walsh

The Nazis are seeking to reestablish the German-dominated Holy Roman Empire, the Rev. Dr. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., declared last night in his opening lecture on "American Diplomacy in Peace and War" before 1,300 persons in Memorial Continental Hall.

The lecture marked the beginning of the sixteenth year of annual discussion on international relations by the regent of Georgetown University's School of Foreign Service.

In back of the Nazi drive to crush the Anglo-Saxons as a world power and set up a German hegemony in the European Continent is a group of "competent . . . fanatical experts" under the direction of Gen. Haushofer, Father Walsh said. The group, known as the "Geophysical Institute," he characterized as "the true Nazi brain trust."

"Gen. Haushofer," Dr. Walsh asserted, "is the master mind and chief adviser of Herr Hitler and at the same time the controlling power over Reich diplomacy and foreign relations.

"As the Politburo of the Russian Communist Party dominates the Russian state and controls its every movement, foreign and domestic, so the Institute of Geopolitics in Munich directs the Nazi government in its foreign adventures."

The foreign service school chief averred class warfare is "basic and inherent" in Marxian Communism," which calls for the ultimate extermination of the bourgeoise and the political supremacy of the proletariat throughout the world." The Nazis have a firm conviction of a similar destiny for the Germanic races, he added. He maintained that the Nazi aggression against Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland, and the Russian tactics in the Baltic and attack on Finland were "predetermined moves on the vast checkerboard of international politics."

"It is not surprising then," Father Walsh observed, "that American diplomacy now finds itself face to face with the most stupendous challenge since the Revolution."

3 Dope Sellers Get 2 to 3 Years in Jail

All Plead Guilty; Fourth Is Convicted As a Conspirator

Three colored men seized by narcotics officers in raids last December were given two to three year prison terms by Justice Peyton Gordon in the District Court yesterday. All three pleaded guilty to sale and possession of drugs.

Justice Gordon granted probation to a fourth man, who was sentenced to four to 24 months in jail after he pleaded guilty to conspiracy to violate the narcotics laws.

Those sentenced are Rufus Ford, 27, colored; Clinton Randolph, 30, colored, and Edward R. Johnson, 40, colored. Ford pleaded guilty to three indictments and received two to three years on each, to be served concurrently. He was fined a total of $150. Randolph and Johnson were fined $50 each.

Granted probation was Ernest B. Davis, colored, 28, who was reported by Federal agents to have been in the company of dope peddlers but who was not connected by evidence to any specific law violation.

All four men sentenced yesterday were described by the agents who arrested them as drug addicts. They were seized in a series of raids between December 14 and 18, in which suspects indicated by a long undercover investigation were rounded up.

House Passes $965,784,438 Naval Bill

Rejects $3,000,000 For Creating Air Base at Guam

By John G. Norris

The largest naval appropriation bill in peace-time history was passed by the House in double-quick time yesterday after a coalition of Democrats and Republicans struck out a $3,000,000 project to make Guam a western Pacific outpost for naval patrol planes.

Only a few scattered nays were heard as the $965,784,438 measure was sent to the Senate by voice vote. There, "big-Navy" supporters hope to restore some of the $112,662,139 slashed from President Roosevelt's budget estimates by the economy-minded House.

Rejection of the Administration proposal to improve the harbor at Guam for use of naval and commercial seaplanes came by a teller vote of 123 to 114 after a sharp floor fight. Opponents of the proposal charged it was the opening wedge of a naval move to fortify the island and would lead to war with Japan.

Supporters of the plan contended the work had nothing to do with the Navy's desire to fortify the island, and that it was simply to make the harbor safe for naval and commercial seaplane operations which coral deposits now make hazardous.

Representative Caldwell (Democrat), of Florida, termed the refusal "to do what we want with our own property" because someone objects "arrant cowardice" and urged the United States to "use back-bone instead of rubber."

"I don't see how America can hope to hold up its head in the group of nations by acting in this manner," he declared.

Richards Sees "Smoke Screen"

Sponsor of the motion to eliminate an initial appropriation of $1,000,000 for the $3,000,000 Guam project, Representative Richards (Democrat), of South Carolina, described it as a "smoke screen behind which the Navy plans to start building a Singapore or Gibraltar" and contended it would not be "in the interests of peace."

Even with the sharp cuts, the $965,784,438 measure exceeds the current outlay for the Navy by $50,000,000. It carries $259,071,979 for starting work on 19 new warships and carrying on construction of 79 others.

Funds for laying down two new 45,000-ton battleships, however, were curtailed by the House Appropriations Committee to barely enough for their plans. Hearing that the craft are about the same size as ships now building abroad, the group condemned the Navy for "imitating" foreign navies and urged the high command to consider building "super-battleships."

The bill provides $99,563,300 in direct appropriations for naval aviation, plus $10,000,000 in contract authorization. This will pay for 353 replacement and reserve training planes, but not allow a 224-plane increase above the 2,863 craft expected to be on hand or order by this June.

Salary Item Restored

No attempt was made on the floor to restore any of the cuts, except a minor item of $7,560 for Navy Department salaries, which was approved. Navy supporters in the House hope the Senate will put back funds for the planes, some of which are for new aircraft carrier Hornet, now nearing completion.

An attempt by Representative Rich (Republican), of Pennsylvania, to eliminate one of the battleships, was voted down, 52 to 19.

Representative Taber (Republican), of New York, warned the Navy and other Government agencies to spread expenditures, and said he and many other members of the Appropriations Committee would oppose all deficiency requests next year, where the proposal had been denied or curtailed in the regular supply bill.

There had been an earlier declaration by Chairman Vinson, of the House Naval Affairs Committee, that the curtailed shipbuilding funds would last only until April, 1941, and that a $75,000,000 deficiency appropriation would be required next winter.

By unanimous vote, the House wrote into the bill a ban on employment of aliens on naval construction projects in the Panama Canal Zone. The rider would apply to all "skilled, technical, clerical, administrative and supervisory employes" there after January 1, 1941.

either Great Britain or France to place trained and sizable active service detachments on the Finnish battlefront quickly.

Observers, moreover, expressed the belief that Britain would hesitate to enter the Finnish-Russian conflict openly for fear of further consolidating Germany's relations with Russia and creating new fronts in the western war.

A steady flow of licensed British volunteers for Finland continued in London, but Finnish sources said it was unlikely any of them would get to Finland in time to help.

French Rushing Guns

In Paris a French government spokesman said a great many anti-tank guns as well as other artillery and airplanes were being dispatched to Finland; that any foreigner in France would be permitted an exit visa to join the Finnish army. Published reports described Finnish victories with French warplanes already on hand.

In Germany, Adolf Hitler's Volkischer Beobachter declared a complete Russian victory in Finland was inevitable; that the British still hoped to prolong the war by getting the Scandinavian countries in on Finland's side; that the Allies never intended to help Finland "any more than the aid given Poland."

Despite the Swedish foreign office statement, for Scandinavia the prospect of a Finnish appeal for Allied troops and a means of getting them to Finland posed an open test of a question which long has worried these countries: Will transport of outside military aid for Finland in large quantities over the Scandinavian peninsula be regarded by both Moscow and Berlin as a sacrifice of neutrality?

1914 Excelled In War at Sea, Nazis Boast

1,000,000 More Tons Of British Shipping Claimed in 5 Months

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Feb. 16.—Germany boasted tonight that her present sea warfare against Great Britain has proved far more effective than in 1914.

With the Nazi naval attack taking a new tack—a stiff offensive against tankers carrying Britain's vital oil supplies—German military experts gave the following comparison to demonstrate the success of the new German navy.

In the first five months of the present war, 1,500,000 tons of British, French and neutral shipping were destroyed; in the first five months of the World War 370,000 tons were sunk.

1918 Average Exceeded

On the basis of these German figures, over 1,000,000 more tons have gone to the bottom in the present war as a result of the intense Nazi sea campaign.

To illustrate further, it was said that in ten months of 1918, 2,750,000 tons were sunk. This meant, the experts said, the tonnage now being destroyed, averaging 300,000 tons monthly, already exceeds the average for the last year of the World War.

(German commentators did not refer to losses inflicted upon shipping in 1917, when unrestricted submarine warfare reached its peak. According to the best available sources, more than 3,500,000 tons of shipping were sunk.)

Since the beginning of the war the volume of sinkings of British oil tankers has increased 112.8 per cent, military authorities said tonight.

Bergerdijk Warned

Nazi raids against Britain's oil carriers have cost her 5.5 per cent of her tankers; the French have lost about 7 per cent of their tanker tonnage and about 4 per cent of total tonnage, the German statement said.

This week the British announced the loss of two large tankers, the 8,501-ton British Triumph, and the 10,191-ton Gretafield. A small tanker was missing.

Through DNB, official news agency, the Germans reiterated that the sinking last Saturday of the Dutch steamer Bergerdijk by a German submarine was justified.

It was said the ship was sunk only after warning had been given, that German prize law regulations were observed rigidly and that the safety of passengers was assured.

Britain Calls 250,000 More To the Colors

Englishmen Now 23 Expected to Be Put Under Arms in March

By Robert E. Bunnelle

Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Feb. 16.—Britain, preparing for any extension of the war front, stepped up its mobilization program tonight to permit quick absorption of a new class of 250,000 conscripts ordered to register tomorrow for military service.

The new conscripts, Britons now 23 years old, probably will be placed under arms early in March in line with a training speedup expected to increase the army to a total of 2,500,000 men before 1941.

At sea, the only stage of the European war where violent action is being fought, the day's reports listed four neutral ships sunk or missing, one small British tanker feared lost, and two Finnish boats bound for Britain captured. Twenty-two lives were lost aboard two Danish vessels torpedoed off northeast Scotland.

39 Survivors Landed

Thirty-nine survivors of the two Danish vessels, the 1,066-ton passenger ship Sleipner and the 1,064-ton Rhone, were landed in a British port.

The ships missing were the British tanker Creofield, 838 tons, and the Norwegian freighter Bisp, 1,000 tons, and Start, 1,168 tons. The Bisp, which carried a crew of 16, left a British port January 20 with a cargo of coal for Norway.

A Helsinki radio broadcast said Germany had captured and confiscated two Finnish ships bound for Britain with cargoes of timber.

The British mobilization speed-up fitted in with Allied troop concentrations in the Near East and Britain's helping hand in the war in Finland.

Recruiting for Finland

Recruiting of volunteers to fight against the Russians, sanctioned by a royal decree published tonight in the London Gazette, is proceeding steadily. It was unlikely, however, that any of the British recruits would reach Finland in time to help turn the tide in the battle now raging on the Karelian Isthmus.

A possible new reservoir of manpower was opened to Britain by action of the government of the Union of South Africa, permitting volunteers to serve outside the Union.

Although the Union government has declared war on Germany, it had made no move hitherto to send expeditionary forces to England, as have other dominions.

Sea Fight Rages For Nazi Vessel

since all they knew was that there had been an "incident" between "the German prison ship Altmark and a British man of war."

Berlin Admits Trap

Berlin, Feb. 16 (AP).—The British destroyer Intrepid was reported by the official German news agency tonight to be lying in wait off the Norwegian coast ready to pounce upon the elusive German steamer Altmark after one unsuccessful attempt to capture the supply and prison ship which accompanied the pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee on its last raiding voyage.

(In Oslo, Norwegian authorities said they had heard nothing of the incident until the German agency reported it. There was no official comment).

The agency, D. N. B., said that skillful maneuvering and the intervention of two Norwegian torpedo boats foiled the first effort of the Intrepid, within 640 yards of Norwegian shores, to seize the Altmark. The ship has carried 300 prisoners taken during the Graf Spee's raiding operations.

(It was not known whether the prisoners, whom the British charged on January 19 were being kept in the Altmark's hold under conditions reminiscent of slave trader ships, were still aboard. The British charges brought a categorical German denial that the prisoners were ill-treated, but one source commented "of course, we could not build roof gardens for our enemies."

(Neither was it clear where the Altmark went after the Intrepid's frustrated attempt to seize her. If she halted in Norwegian territorial waters she was subject to possible internment as was the Nazi prize crew, which sailed the American freighter City of Flint into Haugesund.)

DNB said the Intrepid now was waiting for the Altmark. The news agency described the incident as an "unheard of violation of Norwegian neutrality."

The last contact of the Altmark, a disguised 12,000-ton vessel capable of making 25 knots, and the Graf Spee was on December 8, less than a week before the battle off Uruguay which resulted in the Graf Spee taking refuge in Montevideo and her destruction on the personal order of Adolf Hitler.

The Altmark later was reported to have run the British blockade and reached Germany with her prisoners.

U-Boats Reported Sunk

London, Feb. 16 (AP).—A German submarine was reported bombed and possibly sunk in the North Sea today by an airplane of the Royal Air Force coastal command.

An unofficial statement said the plane was only a half-mile off when the submarine sighted it.

"The aircraft reached the submarine just as its periscope disappeared," the statement said.

"Of the bombs dropped, one fell directly ahead of the periscope and a few moments later another burst just in front of the same spot.

"Patches of oil and a quantity of oil bubbles appeared . . . No further trace of the submarine was seen."

British Ship Sunk

Dublin, Feb. 16 (AP).—The sinking of the 4,622-ton British freighter Langleeford by a German submarine Wednesday in the Atlantic was disclosed tonight with the arrival of 15 exhausted crewmen on the west coast of Ireland.

One sailor was killed when a torpedo hit the ship, two died in the lifeboat and a second boat carrying the captain and 14 other crewmen was missing.

U. S. Rejects C.I.O. Criticism Of Gainard

Return of the Flint Called Best Evidence Captain Did Good Job

By the Associated Press

Commander R. S. Field, director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, refused yesterday to consider complaints filed by the National Maritime Union of the C. I. O. against Capt. Joseph A. Gainard of the S. S. City of Flint.

The complaints alleged that, after a German prize crew took possession of the American vessel last October, Gainard failed to communicate with the American consul at Tromsoe, Norway, and that Gainard failed to sail from Murmansk, Russia, when the Germans temporarily left the ship. Field replied:

"I could not possibly give serious attention to statements made by a mess boy and a cook to the effect that they were not satisfied with the way the captain handled his job. The evidence which you have submitted does not justify the institution of any investigation on the part of this bureau."

"The fact that the vessel and its crew returned safely to the United States," Field said, "is the best possible evidence that Capt. Gainard, in site of the difficulties encountered, took a proper course and did a good job." (The ship finally was released by Norwegian authorities at Haugesund.)

"It is apparent that Capt. Gainard performed his duties throughout the whole affair with wisdom, patience and forbearance," Field continued. "His actions as master of the vessel while in Norwegian and Russian ports were, as far as the situation in those countries permitted, under the observation of the officials of the United States Foreign Service. No criticism of his conduct has ben heard from the State Department and on the contrary the American Minister to Norway has commented with high favor on the manner in which he conducted himself and his affairs."

Quoting from the log of the City of Flint, Field said that Gainard did try at Tromsoe to reach American consular officials, but failed. He also asserted that at Murmansk the Russians told Gainard at first that he was free to sail as soon as his papers were ready but the papers never were returned to the captain and instead the Russians returned the ship to the Germans.

Finns Doomed, Germans Say

cal qualifications, endurance, frugality and courage. It also acknowledges—for the first time in Germany—that the Russian attempt to imitate the German blitzkrieg in Poland fell short of expectations; that the Finns achieved "in individual places noteworthy successes."

But the article warns against "tendencious exaggeration of these successes into wild victory reports," as being merely English maneuvers to lure neutral Nordic states into war, in hope of easy successes against the Soviet Union for the benefit of England.

The Finns, the article calculates, have only between 250,000 and 350,000 men as compared with five armies totaling 30 divisions, or between 500,000 and 600,000 men thrown against them by Russia.

Also, says the article, the Finnish navy and air force are too weak to affect the outcome of the war, and Finland is mainly dependent on the outside world for war supplies because the output of her own arms industry is problematical. Russia on the other hand, expected to use between 1,000 and 1,200 planes on the Finnish front.

Lay Success to Winter

"Against such superiority, which will grow in the spring," says the Beobachter article, "the Finnish army cannot in the end maintain itself, especially when it has lost the protection of a hard winter which precludes larger movements. For it is not the strength of the Mannerheim Line nor the allegedly poor organization and leadership of the Soviet troops that has saved Finland so far, but primarily the Finnish winter which prevented Russian leadership from making its superiority effective.

"Meanwhile, however, Russian pressure against the Karelian Isthmus has been increasing since the beginning of February. Finnish army reports no longer are free from care, pleas for support are growing more urgent for supplies and munitions dwindle, and increasing air attacks against the supply lines and arms industries are beginning to tell.

"But when the cold abates, when the snowstorms cease, when the roads give freedom of movement to strong Russian motorized units, and the Finnish air room opens up to the Russian air force, then a few thousand volunteers, a few airplanes and guns no longer can serve Finland either, and for any real help, it will be too late.

"Again perhaps a state will be annihilated which built its political decisions on sand—namely, on the promises of the western powers.

"It can be only wishes that all neutral states recognize an optimistic judgment of the Finnish war situation in the press hostile to Russia as to what it really is—namely, a well-considered move in England's political chess game.

"If instead of being guided by sober military insight, they are guided by emotion and permit themselves to be used as chess pawns in England's false game, they are liable to play all too lightly with their own existence."

Officially Germany professes neutrality in the Russo-Finnish conflict.

Allies Plan Unrestricted Retaliation

French Say Nazis Have Gone Beyond Pale of World Law

By Lansing Warren

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Feb. 16.—Germany's actions have removed war at sea from the range of international law and henceforth Great Britain and France will retaliate with unrestricted measures based purely on the notion of reprisals.

This was the French official reaction today to the Reich's announcement that neutral ships which touched British and French ports would be subject to being torpedoed.

"If this threat is carried out we will extend the blockade to the full extent of our technical and material possibilities," said the official spokesman of the foreign office today.

"It is pure gangsterism and piracy which must be met with reprisals until this lawless power has been overcome."

In French circles this new talk taken by the Reich's authorities can be linked with difficulties the Germans are having in making their economic accords with Russia produce in a way they had hoped.

"The German attitude already has met a protest in the United States," says Le Temps tonight, "and if the Germans carry out this threat, it may have grave consequences at the moment when Sumner Welles is going to start on his inquiry in Europe and when the Washington Government is commencing negotiations with neutrals."

London, Feb. 16.—The British authorities will continue their practice of requiring American and other neutral ships to enter contraband control centers for cargo and mail examination, despite the announcement in Berlin that neutral vessels subject to such detention will be liable "theoretically" to sinking by German U-boats, even though they may be bound from one neutral port to another.

The ministry of economic warfare said today that feasible means of conducting examinations for contraband, and that Britain could not afford to give up the practice since such a step would endanger the success of one of the most effective weapons at her disposal in the war against the Reich—the blockade.

These statements were elicited by the suggestion in various quarters in the United States that new pressure should be brought on London by Washington to put a stop to the detention of American ships in British control centers when those ships are bound from and to neutral ports.

Protest Unanswered

It is realized here, of course, that irritation in the United States of British contraband procedure is hardly diminished by the fact that the British government has not yet replied formally to Washington's protest last December against any Allied "right" to take American vessels into ports within the combat zone, declared by the President under the Neutrality Act.

It was stated authoritatively tonight that a formal reply will be sent, and that it will be based in part on the informal conversations which are now in progress between Washington and London on all the issues raised by Britain's blockade procedure.

Dies Preparing U. S. for War, Says Moscow

Government Press Says Communist Drive Is to 'Clear the Rear'

By the United Press

London, Feb. 16.—Great Britain and France today signed a commercial agreement aimed at winning Germany's markets throughout the world.

The pact envisages a common export policy designed to capture markets which formerly were outlets for German, Austrian, Czecho-Slovakian and Polish products.

The agreement also was designed to prevent Anglo-French commercial competition.

The pact was signed at the foreign office by Viscount Halifax, British minister of foreign affairs, and Charles Corbin, French ambassador to Britain.

It was understood that the pact covers the colonies of both countries as well. Negotiations were understood to be under way to include the dominions.

The British import quota for French products variously was increased under the agreement, between 100 and 300 per cent, including British import of French wines, silk, fruit, vegetables and other commodities. France increased greatly her facility to import British coal and other goods.

Moscow, Feb. 16.—Germany is supplanting England and France in Russia's trade relations since the latter's trade with the Western Allies has been "reduced practically to nothing," the government newspaper Izvestia said today.

Another Soviet newspaper, Komsomolskaya Pravda, organ of the Communist Youth League, charged that the United States was taking advantage of Japan's increasing dependence on the United States as a source of raw materials in order to gain supremacy in the Pacific.

Izvestia said "American capitalists are preparing for the entry of the United States" into the European war and that the work of the Dies Committee and drives against trade unions and Communists were being pressed to "clear the rear."

In an article on the Russian-German trade agreement concluded Monday, Izvestia predicted that as a result of this pact Russia's political as well as economic ties with Germany would be further strengthened.

Declaring the pact "will provide Germany with necessary raw materials" Izvestia continued:

"This Soviet agreement proves that the fundamental improvement in political relations between the U. S. S. R. and Germany which took place at the end of last year and the friendly relations then established between them are growing stronger and possess a solid basis for further favorable development . . ."

Izvestia said Russia "now will experience no difficulties because of the fact that trade of the U. S. S. R. with England and France has been reduced practically to nothing by the will of the governments of those countries."

Jones Calls Finns Good Risk; Says Government Will Live

Jesse Jones, Federal loan administrator, expressed the view to Congress yesterday that Finland would survive its war with Russia and pay off its debts.

Jones appeared before the House Banking Committee in support of a bill to increase capitalization of the Export-Import Bank by $100,000,000.

Under the proposed increase already voted by the Senate, the bank, an adjunct of Jones' loan agency, could lend up to $20,000,000 to the Finns.

Spirit Won't Be Crushed

Lending Finland this sum will not decide the war, "but, in my opinion, the spirit of the Finnish people will not be crushed," Mr. Jones told the committee.

"Some of the present generation may be killed off, but I believe there will be a Finnish government for a long tme, and that it will pay its debts," the loan administrator added.

He made the statement when asked by Representative Gifford (Republican), of Massachusetts, if he would have to find that Finland could repay the loan.

Mr. Gifford told Mr. Jones he wanted to go on record "as wanting you to lend Finland as much as you can and for whatever purpose you can." He was only trying to find out, he said, whether the bank would have to feel sure repayment would be possible.

Wolcott Critical

"When this war is over," Mr. Jones predicted, "I do not believe the map of Europe will be greatly changed. I think there still will be a Finland, a Norway, Denmark and Sweden."

Representative Wolcott (Republican), of Michigan, declared that if the pending bill were put on the basis of helping Finland, "I don't believe a handful of members of Congress would oppose it, but we want to maintain our neutral position."

Wolcott was criticizing the form in which the issue is presented by the Senate-approved bill, namely to increase the general lending authority of the Export-Import Bank by $100,000,000, with discretion to advance $20,000,000 of that total to Finland.

Although all of the committee members who joined in the discussion indicated a desire to help Finland, the bill once more was slowed up on its tedious legislative journey when the committee recessed until Monday morning without completing Jones' testimony.

engaged in several successful air battles. In the course of the day we bombed enemy encampments and railways and stations behind his lines. Fires were observed in the encampments after the bombing.

"Enemy air activity was concentrated in the war zone most severely on the isthmus, where the number of enemy planes was estimated 500. Besides, the Finnish troops at Lappeenranta and Kakisali and Viipuri were bombed.

"Outside the war zone the enemy bombed Riihimaki and other places.

"According to verified reports, we shot down eight enemy planes, besides which there were two doubtful cases. Of the doubtful cases reported on February 14, one has been confirmed, as the remains of the plane have been found."

Semiofficial advices issued prior to tonight's communique indicated that the Mannerheim Line, a deep series of fortifications, was holding firm. The line is so constructed in the wooded and lake-dotted terrain that positions can be lost without necessarily risking a serious break.

Nevertheless, today's situation recalled assertions of the Finns that against the great man and machine power of the Russians they must some day have help.

Church of the Week

All Souls' Unitarian Bustles 7 Days a Week With Spiritual and Recreational Programs

A busy day in the nursery school of All Souls' Unitarian Church. Left to right are Constance Cornwall, 3; George Lazzari, 4; Romona Lee Corbin, 4; Daniel Kilgore, 3, and Katherine Wright, 4. The school meets daily

By Robert Tate Allan

A seven-day-a-week program of spiritual, intellectual, moral and physical development marks All Souls' Unitarian Church among Washington's greatest community assets.

Boys' and girls' clubs, Scouts' dramatic and discussion groups, business women's units, nursery school, motion picture "hours," inspiring worship services, church school and divers other wholesome projects keep the building bustling with activity.

Among the favorite spots is the recreation center under the church auditorium at Sixteenth and Harvard streets northwest. It was the gift of an anonymous donor—not a member of All Souls'—who was impressed by the church's program of community service.

In addition to being used by the adult class in current problems and other groups on Sundays and other days, the center gets a "workout" from Police Boys Club youngsters on Mondays and Thursdays from 3:30 to 9 p. m.

Sports Equipment Provided

Enrolled in the club are some 500 boys of the neighborhood, who take part in stimulating programs under the leadership of Roy D. Engel and his aides.

Showers and all types of sport and game equipment are provided for the lads, whose youthful energies are directed into worthwhile channels.

In the fall of 1938 girls of the neighborhood urged recreational and social facilities. Action was taken, and today they meet on Wednesday afternoons in the center under the guidance of Mrs. Charles E. Wright.

Other youth activities revolve around the Charmian (high school) Club, led by Miss Barbara Myers; the L'Allegro Club, under Milo Sonen; the Boy and Girl Scouts, the Campfire Girls and other groups. The youths frequently have hikes on Sunday afternoons, after which they enjoy a worship program and supper.

Plays Successful

And who hasn't heard of the Pierce Hall Players?

Organized ten years ago under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Hilding Beij, son-in-law and daughter of Dr. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, for 40 years All Souls' pastor, the thespians' group has grown until it is now recognized as one of the outstanding organizations in this part of the country.

They recently gave presentations of "What a Life," the first time that Broadway success had been attempted by an amateur organization. Critics raved. Edmund J. Evans is chairman of the players' group. The Pierce Hall Players have been the soil from which several professional actors and actresses have sprouted.

Pierce Hall, wing of the parish hall, furnishes meeting space for the church school, the players' group, clubs and other organizations meet there.

Unique among local churches is All Souls' presentation of films. Motion picture equipment with Western Electric sound accompaniment provides entertainment, with foreign language films on Saturday nights and others on Sunday evenings.

Dr. Taylor to Speak

Among All Souls' most interesting discussion groups have been the class in comparative religion and the class in current problems. Rabbi Harry Silverstone, of Tifereth Israel Synagogue, has for several years spoken once monthly before the former unit. Dr. Paul A. Goettleman, of the Catholic University School of Architecture, will speak tomorrow at 10 a. m. on "Art in the Early Church.

Dr. Carl C. Taylor, of the Department of Agriculture, will address the current problems class at 10 a. m. tomorrow on "Thomas Jefferson, Democrat in Religion."

Among other organizations of the congregation and their leaders are the Woman's Alliance, led by Mrs. John P. Strother, which sews for the Red Cross, the Florence Crittenton Home, Gallinger and Children's Hospitals; the Unitarian Laymen's League, of which Howard L. Knight is president, and the Business and Professional Women's Club, led by Miss Elva Dunkle.

All Souls' Church will build a home for the aged in the near future through a legacy of $50,000 in the will of Julius Garfinkel. He was a friend of the late Mr. and Mrs. George A. Ricker, who "pioneered" the idea of such a home many years ago.

Distinguished religious and civic leader of the Nation's Capital is Dr. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, dean of local clergymen. He came to the historic 118-year-old congregation in 1901 from Ithaca, N. Y. Former chaplain of the Senate, he serves on the boards of St. Elizabeths Hospital, Howard University and Gallaudet College.

Laurence C. Staples has served as executive secretary of the congregation since 1924. Harvard graduate, he came to Washington shortly after the World War, and was for several years in the Federal educational and Public Health Service.

William G. Eliot, 3d, son of one of the founders of the local congregation, and relative of Dr. Frederick M. Eliot, president of the Universalist Churches, is chairman of the board of trustees.

Little Stories about GREAT HYMNS

"GOD BE WITH YOU"
*Rev. J. E. Rankin

"God be with you till we meet again;
By His counsels guide, uphold you,
With His sheep securely fold you;
God be with you till we meet again."

Chorus:
"Till we meet, till we meet,
Till we meet at Jesus' feet;
Till we meet, till we meet,
God be with you till we meet again."

*Written in 1882 by the Rev. Jeremiah E. Rankin, a New England minister, it was composed as a Christian hymn on the basis of the etymology of "Good-bye", which is "God be with you." Friends at the wharf waving good-bye to missionaries frequently sing this hymn as the boat departs and find in it an appropriate expression of their sentiments.

Tuberculosis Gains Told At G. W. Clinic

Ratio of Infection In Medical School Reported Deeply Cut

Tuberculosis, which strikes an alarmingly great number of medical students and nurses in training, has been all but stamped out at George Washington University Medical School, it was reported yesterday.

In an address delivered before the institution's eighth annual postgraduate clinic, Dr. Leland W. Parr, professor of bacteriology, announced that only four cases were discovered in the student body in 1938-39 and none so far this year.

All four cases were of the minimal type and all have been arrested as the result of early diagnosis and prompt treatment, Dr. Parr said. Two are now serving hospital interneships and the others are back in class, one a sophomore and the other a senior.

Ratio "Very Favorable"

With an enrollment of 250 in the medical school, the tuberculosis percentage may be considered very favorable, Dr. Parr told the assembled doctors, the majority of whom are graduates of G. W. U.

Dean Walter A. Bloedorn, the preceding speaker, said the "importance of maintaining the health of student personnel cannot be overemphasized," citing the following procedures which are prescribed:

Physical examination, smallpox vaccine and typhoid paratyphoid vaccine for each first-year student.

Dick and Shick tests for each second-year student.

Immunization against diphtheria positives to each second-year student.

Chest X-rays of all incoming students, as well as tuberculin tests on all freshmen, each "positive" being X-rayed and followed from year to year.

Blood typing of every student.

"I venture to predict," said Dr. Bloedorn, "that the time is not far distant when the ability to pass a thorough physical examination will be one of the requirements for admission to the medical school.

"It stands to reason that applicants with incipient tuberculosis, cardiovascular disease, defective vision or hearing and other physical defects which may handicap the student should have most careful consideration by the admissions committee before they are accepted for the long and arduous period required for a medical education."

Dr. Parr pointed out that the G. W. U. tuberculosis record is especially favorable when considered in the light of the high incidence of the disease in Washington.

The opening session of the two-day postgraduate clinic which is being held at the university's medical school also heard a comprehensive description of sulfapyridine, "wonder drug" in treatment of pneumonia, by Dr. George B. Roth, professor of pharmacology.

Chemical Not Superior

He emphasized that the chemical compound "is in no sense superior to serum" and that the combined use of serum and sulfapyridine in a given pneumonia case is likely to produce better results than if only one or the other is employed.

Visiting speakers yesterday, all of whom discussed obstetrical problems, were Dr. Nicholson J. Eastman, of Johns Hopkins University; Dr. Willard Richardson Cooke, of the University of Texas, and Dr. John Cooke Hirst, of the University of Pennsylvania.

They were introduced by Forbes H. Burgess, class of 1940, president of the A. F. A. King Obstetrical Society, which sponsored the afternoon and evening symposium on the complications of pregnancy.

Dr. Samuel M. Dodek, one of the founders of the honor society, announced the election to membership of the following juniors in the medical school:

Phillip A. Cox and Abraham W. Danish, both of Washington; George A. Gray, Chevy Chase, Md.; Isador M. Lavine, Mount Rainier, Md.; Jerome Brawer, New Jersey; Irving B. Brick, Florida; Herman O. Dreskin, New Jersey; William Clayton Jenkins, Utah; Sydney Levine and Hugh F. Mahoney, Massachusetts; Virgil A. LoRusso, Pennsylvania; George D. McAfee, Colorado; Roswell S. Mills and Bernard D. Svedlow, New York, and Zack W. Sanders, West Virginia.

Another lecture session will be conducted this morning and the closing event of the postgraduate course will be a banquet tonight at the Hotel Mayflower, sponsored by the George Washington Medical Society. Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes will speak.

House-Boaters Watch Potomac, Fearing Sudden Break of Ice Jam

Rush Might Sweep Their Homes Away; Want It Dynamited

George Forshee, a man with squinty eyes and a drawl, slammed the door of his tiny house at 3820 K street northwest yesterday and went into his yard "to see how long the house might be around here."

The sun shone brightly and glare from the river ice made him squint the more, then turn his eyes away to the steep, vine-covered bank, topped by railroad tracks, overlooking his house. Again he squinted at the ice jam upstream, by the Three Sisters Islands, piles of rock in the river.

"It's one of two things," he said. "It will come down, maybe, or it won't. If it does, let it come. If it can come any faster than I can jump up that bank, it can have me."

Wife Stays at Work

He measured the distance visually. "It would simply be a matter of moving along," he said. Then Chang, one of two Chow dogs (the other is Ching) came up, and three Maltese cats followed. The tiny yard, hemmed in between the ice-jammed river and the steep bank, became crowded as most of the family joined Forshee.

They all looked at the river, George, jr., 15; Hazel, 17, and Roy, 20. Mrs. Mary Forshee stayed inside the house, a small, square structure, reinforced outside with heavy cardboard and perched on a scow. A chimney gushed smoke.

Forshee observed that it was warm enough and well enough, year round, if the ice didn't rout him out now. He was a painter and Roy was, too. Eight years ago they came from Wilmington, N. C., and built their house on the scow. Better in winter than summer. In summer men and women get in canoes and raise so much fuss a man can't sleep. But he, perched right in the river, was least disturbed of all.

Want It Dynamited

Talk of the ice ran yesterday among the 30 or more houseboat dwellers on the river. Some of them felt alarm and said the District ought to dynamite it. They pointed to open water, a small channel where the current ran just above Key Bridge, and considered the ice could easily be cut in there. Then they pointed up to the Three Sisters—where they said the threat was building up.

The danger, they said, was in a strong flow pushing against the heavy ice and sending it piling on the lesser jams downstream. If the ice around Key Bridge could be removed, it would naturally clear the stream for movement of heavier ice that would be sent piling down.

T. V. Cole, who has lived on the river 30 years—who said he knows the river can get bad but that he isn't ready to join in every alarm—estimated the ice to be about six inches thick now.

Cole regarded it clinically from his doorstep, right off the river. "If swift water doesn't hit her, she'll go away herself," he opined.

Lutherans Opening Drive To Aid Finns

Sen. Wiley to Speak On Radio; Appeals Planned From Pulpits

In preparation for the Lutheran churches of America's $500,000 war relief drive scheduled to begin tomorrow, Senator Wiley (Republican), Wisconsin, will speak today at 1:30 p. m. on a Nation-wide Columbia Broadcasting System hookup.

Appeals for support of the drive, being continued until Easter—March 24—will come from some 30 Lutheran pulpits in Maryland, Virginia and the District.

Approximately $300,000 of the proposed fund is to be sent to Finland, and distributed by Lutheran pastors under the direction of Archbishop Kailla. About 98 per cent of the Finnish population is said to be Lutheran.

About $150,000 will be allocated for support of Lutheran mission work in India, China, New Guinea, Palestine and East and South Africa. A third portion will be used to transport 400 Lutheran refugee families gathered in New York City to various Western communities where Lutheran congregations have made provisions for them.

Dr. Oscar C. Mees, of Canton, Ohio, national administrator of the drive, visited here last Monday to confer with pastors and lay workers concerning the campaign. Church officials assured him of full cooperation from local Lutheran groups.

The Golden Text is from Leviticus 26: 11, 12. "I will set my tabernacle among you: and my soul shall not abhor you. And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people."

Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." (I Corinthians 15:50.)

A similar number participated in the benefit gathering of Potomac Auxiliary Union, No. 40, American Legion, in Palisades Fieldhouse, Sherrier place and Edmunds street northwest. A smaller group played at the home of Mrs. Sue Yaendole, 2414 Tenth street northeast, under auspices of the Government Printing Office Auxiliary Union, No. 33, American Legion.

ditions we'll furnish it," Schulte said.

Maj. Brown submitted to Schulte the names of 11 persons, including one baby placement agent, who, he said, could give the subcommittee valuable information.

"This is a horrible situation if babies are being sold without proper regulation by law," said Schulte. "I wonder why District officials haven't done something about it."

Schulte said the subcommittee probably will hold an executive session with public welfare officials, police and other persons listed by Maj. Brown before starting open hearings.

He emphasized that the persons named were in no sense involved in the inquiry other than as aids to the subcommittee.

The witnesses who will be called by Schulte are:

Miss A. Patricia Morss, chief of the child welfare division of the Board of Public Welfare; Mrs. Nina Trevette, in charge of adoptions in the child welfare division; Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, director of the bureau of maternal and child health of the Health Department.

Mrs. Mildred Terrett, director of the Child's Protective Association; Miss Linda Woods, social service worker, Columbia Hospital; Capt. Rhoda J. Milliken, Women's Bureau of the Metropolitan Police Department.

Policewoman Fern V. Louthan, Woman's Bureau; Mrs. Anne L. Grover, 3813 Jocelyn street; Dr. P. A. McLendon and Dr. Prentiss Willson, who conduct medical examinations for Mrs. Grover, and Private Edwin S. Grayson, public relations division, Police Department.

Meanwhile, a subcommittee of the Legislative Committee of the Child Welfare Division of the Council of Social Agencies, which met yesterday to consider the draft of a bill to license child-placing agencies, postponed action on the bill pending several revisions in its text. Mrs. Herbert N. Budlong, subcommittee chairman, said the revised bill would be considered and, in some form, presented to the full committee in the near future.

Explorer Tells Of Dramatic Trip Down Colorado

Navigating the rapids of the Colorado River is made extremely hazardous because the brown, silt-laden waters do not break white over the bowlders that strew the channel, Amos Burg, author and explorer, told members of the National Geographic Society in a lecture last night at Constitution Hall.

Motion pictures describing the Burg-Holmstrom expedition which navigated the Colorado from Green River, Wyo., to Lake Mead behind Bowlder Dam illustrated the talk.

The 1,350-mile trip was made in an 83-pound inflated rubber boat and a homemade cedar boat weighing 500 pounds. The river drops 7,000 feet and surges through 18 canyons which make it "the most dramatic canyon river in the world," according to the speaker.

At the foot of one of the most violent rapids, the voyagers found the skeleton of a former traveler who had apparently lost his boat and had been unable to climb out of the canyon.

filed in a properly sealed file in the Juvenile Court, according to the draft.

Privacy for Mother Sought

"We want to make the situation so that licensed agencies will meet the needs, and so the unmarried mother can count on privacy. We want to provide protection for the baby and for the foster parents in whose home the baby may be placed," Mrs. Budlong said.

The House District Committee is expected to hear at its meeting Monday a report on the progress in drafting the legislation, but it still has to go through several preliminary stages. It must be approved by the legislative committee of the Council of Social Agencies' child welfare division, before finally going to the member agencies. Action of their boards will determine which ones will co-operate in pushing the legislation toward enactment.

The group at work on this legislation includes prominent social workers, public officials and interested citizens. They are Sefton Darr, former president of the District Bar Association; Mrs. Spencer Gordon, member of the Board of Public Welfare; Miss Agnes Hanna, of the United States Children's Bureau; Dr. Loren Johnson, Miss A. Patricia Morss, director of the child welfare division, Board of Public Welfare; Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, director of maternal and child welfare, Health Department; Miss Alice Padgett, instructor in social work at Catholic University; Miss Marita Redington, of Catholic Charities; Msgr. Lawrence J. Shehan, director of Catholic Charities; Mrs. Olive W. Swinney, secretary of the child welfare division of the Council of Social Agencies, and Miss Mildred Terrett, executive secretary of Children's Protective Association.

Committees Draft Legislation

Mrs. Louis Ottenburg, as chairman of the legislative committee of the council's child welfare division, sits in at the meetings of the three subcommittees at work on legislation.

The two other subcommittees also are draftnig legislation which social workers consider vital to child welfare in the District.

One bill would enlarge the powers of the Board of Public Welfare to provide more protective service to children, along with a casework service to unmarried mothers and their babies, and to allow the board to give care to children away from their own homes without court commitment.

Miss Alice Padgett is chairman of this subcommittee which includes Mrs. Arthur J. Altmeyer, Mrs. Paul Appleby, Miss Agnes Hanna, Mrs. Peter Kasius, Mrs. Paul Kaufman, Miss A. Patricia Morss, Miss Marita Redington, Miss Helen Richards, of the Juvenile Court.

A draft of the bill by the Board of Public Welfare was approved by this subcommittee. But the board is re-considering the draft for possible changes which would send it back to the subcommittee.

The third piece of legislation deals with the replacement of the so-called Bastardly Act of 1912 to bring a more socialized viewpoint to bear on the problems of establishing paternity and providing suppfort for a child born out of wedlock.

Committee Members Listed

Albert Conradis, attorney, is serving as chairman of the subcommittee for this legislation, with the other members including: Judge Fay Bentley, Miss Joan Cole, superintendent of Florence Crittenton Home; Ray Everett, of the Social Hygiene Society; Capt. Rhoda Milliken, of the Woman's Bureau, Metropolitan Police; Mrs. Theodore Sheafer.

It takes an awakened community to strengthen the hands of the social work group in obtaining this legislation," Mrs. Swinney pointed out. "The importance of each of these three pieces of legislation has been a source of concern to professional social workers of the community for many years.

"In the three subcommittees, wide representation was sought from social agencies principally concerned with child welfare, from bar and medical associations and civic organizations, so various viewpoints in the community can participate.

"The legislative committee will seek the support of the whole community as soon as final drafts are in order.

"It is hoped that all three bills will be ready for presentation at this session of Congress with the united backing of citizens who wish to see a new day for underprivileged children here."

D. C. Cabinet To Draft Reply On Seal Plan

Transmittal Letter Will Be Dispatched Monday to Congress

The Commissioners' letter of transmittal to accompany their District reorganization bill will be drafted today at 10:30 a. m. when their "kitchen cabinet" meets in the office of Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal.

The letter, it is expected, will contain a commentary on the objections to the bill expressed by the Department of War, Department of Interior, Comptroller General and Civil Service Commission. These objections returned to the Commissioners last week by the Federal Budget Bureau.

Seal said the proposed bill, comments from the agencies, and the Commissioners' letter would be sent to Congress Monday, when Commissioner George E. Allen is due back in town.

Other members of the cabinet are Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor; Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, and Richard B. Keech, vice chairman of the Public Utilities Commission.

'I Take This Woman' Rehashes Old Theme Done in 'Citadel;' Lew Parker Clicks

An attempted and an accomplished suicide. A hasty and inexplicable wooing and a precipitate wedding. A young doctor lured from his life of service in the slums to the glossy precincts surrounding a bit of medical racketeering on the rich. A little night clubbing to prove that the earnest young doctor doesn't belong among the upper ten and that his ravishingly beautiful wife does. An abysmal number of abysmally trite cliches. The restoration of the humanitarian medico to the people he can serve best.

Such are the ingredients that were whipped up by one Charles MacArthur into the celluloid charade that is being presented this week on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater under the title of "I Take This Woman." It is a little difficulty in the chronology of the cinema to determine which got there first—Mr. Cronin with his admirable tale of "The Citadel," or Mr. MacArthur with his virtual going over of the same ground.

Having reached the screen in the van of "I Take This Woman," Mr. Cronin must be credited with the ten-strike. Mr. MacArthur's essay at the problems of a useful practitioner of medicine, proselyted from the field of his greatest value to the sheer pursuit of money, seems now conspicuously lame and carbon-copy.

There can be no question that "I Take This Woman" will strike a responsive chord in more than one susceptible breast. With such casting as Spencer Tracy and Hedy Lamarr in the costellar roles, that is inevitable. We have yet to recall an occasion upon which Mr. Tracy has given a lackadaisical performance. He does not do so here, although his part is such as to inspire the belief that he must have played it for the most part with his tongue in his cheek. There isn't much in the role of Karl Decker that he can get his teeth into. Teeth do not stick too soundly in a mess of lemon-meringe dialogue. As for Miss Lamarr, nothing seems to be essential beyond her supreme capacity for looking more devasting than any one woman has a right to be. There still is no tangible evidence that Miss Lamarr can act, but there is overwhelming evidence that Providence has equipped her to look like a million dollars.

Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer have tricked "I Take This Woman" up with all of the visual advantages of prodigal production and have surrounded the stars with a supporting cast of more than casual merit. Foremost among the secondary players, I should say, is Veree Teasdale, who does a brittle and bitingly effective bit of work as the vivacious decoration of cafe society who has more than a little to do with the eventual smoothing out of the Decker problems of private and professional living. Kent Taylor, Louis Calhern, Paul Cavanaugh, Loraine Day, and Jock Carson are among others who do as much as can be done to salvage Mr. MacArthur's sorry fiction.

The stage bill at the Capitol this week is fashioned in one of Production manager Gene Ford's beter molds. It has the nimble Lew Parker as its versatile master of ceremonies and Estelle Taylor as its headliner. Both are known to Capital theatergoers as artists of constantly growing stature in the theater. Le Paul, La May, Moore and Martin, and Lily Sandan are among others who contribute to a gay hour of whimsical humor that aptly enough has been given the name of "Crazy Show." Lew Parker sees to it that the title fits.

RKO-Keith's

Rollicking into a second week at RKO-Keith's Theater is what "My Little Chickadee" is doing. It would have to rollick because Mae West and W. C. Fields, in the principal roles do nothing else and supply the piece with only flippancies upon which to score so resounding with the public.

Something in the nature of a glorified Western, "My Little Chackadee" follows no set formula. It rambles about through a succession of humorous, semihumorous and unhumorous episodes that bear no striking relation one to the other, but do manage to pile up a pretty mountainous heap of nonsensical fol-de-rol.

Mr. Fields is at his best in the scenes wherein he displays the weird accomplishments of an amiably crooked gambler. Miss West flaunts herself all over the place, or approximately, as the slightly unchaste—but plenty chased—figure of feminine fascination she always has been on the screen.

You Could Hardly Blame Mr. Tracy!

HEDY LAMARR,
the young lady of the title in "I Take This Woman," in which she is currently costarred with Spencer Tracy on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater. Veree Teasdale, Paul Cavanaugh and Louis Calhern are foremost in the supporting cast

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Feb. 16.

POL. COMM. VALENTINE: At least two of the 17 men indicted for seditious conspiracy in Brooklyn, have signed confessions . . . Gene Tunney: William Saroyan is trying to revive Heywood Broun's Nutmeg, as a memorial to the late columnist. You and the others who were cofounders of the weekly, will be asked to remain as directors . . . Alexander Woollcot: Sam Goldwyn topped the $200,000 offer made by another company for the movie rights to "The Man Who Came to Dinner" . . . Roy Larsen; Margaret Bourke-White, now in Europe on an assignment from your magazine, Life, sent a Valentine message to Erskine Caldwell, her husband. It read: "Adoration, Adoration, Adoration, Adoration, Adoration, Adoration, Adoration (signed) Your-want-to-come-home-wife." It was sent from Ankara—and cost 70 cents a word.

FRANCHOT TONE: Vinton Freedley hopes that your new show, Hemingway's "The Fifth Column," is a success—although he had the production-rights two years ago, and then relinquished them . . . Freedley had gone to Bimini, where he went fishing with Hemingway. He spoke about Hemingway's new play, and asked to produce it . . . "Wait," said Ernest, continuing to fish . . . Freedley again discussed the play, and again Hemingway said "Wait" . . . Then Ernest had a strike—a marlin. He reeled in his prize, landed it, then turned to Freedley, and said: "The play is yours."

MAYOR LaGUARDIA: You'll be called to Knickerbocker Village soon—because of a threatened Tenants' Strike . . . Spec. Pros. Amen: Dr. Ditchick, now being prosecuted by you in the Abortion Racket, doesn't expect to take the stand. His attorneys now plan to enter no defense, and argue solely about the law involved . . . Jack Benny: In Bob Hope's new picture, "Ghost-Breakers," he introduces his Negro valet as "Syracuse" . . . Will Hays: Irwin Shaw, the playwright, is delaying acceptance of Hollywood offers now being made to him. "The warm climate out there isn't conducive to work," Shaw explained. "Out there a guy should lie on his back, and have bananas drop in his face."

COL. THEODORE ROOSEVELT: When you lef your office at Doubleday, Doran, and met Irving Berlin, you showed him your copy of Oscar Levant's "A Smattering Of Ignorance," and said: "Here's one book you must read" . . . As a matter of fact, Berlin read it long ago. That's why he no longer speaks to Levant—because of what Oscar wrote about him.

SHIRLEY TEMPLE: In your next picture, "The Young People," Jack Oakie will play the role of your Father . . . George Schaefer: Your film company, RKO, for whom you purchased Christopher Morley's best-seller, "Kitty Foyle," won't be sued because of similarity of name. Morley decided upon that name because he remembered the beauty of Lough Foyle, the long bay which is the approach to the town of Londonderry. And then he checked with the phone-directory, and found only one Foyle in it . . . John Kieran: Your brother, Jim, has sold the detective story he started to write as soon as he resigned as LaGuardia's secretary. He received $1,000 for the story.

MARGARET MITCHELL: Dave Selznick, who produced "Gone With the Wind," is fascinaed by some of the figures he's received in exhibitor-reports . . . "For instance," he told a group of houseguests, "do you know hat 74 per cent of the population of Reading already has seen the picture? The other 26 per cent must be sick, or infirm, or" . . . "Or else," Herman Mankiewicz suggested, "they're people who think they've already seen it."

CHARLES EDISON: An unusual custom prevails at the Saturday night boxing-matches at the Naval Academy. The invitations announce formal-dress-required. And cheering for any of the fighters is frowned upon. Whenever any one starts rooting for one of the men in the ring, an awesome voice booms: "Silence, please" . . . Laurence Olivier: Vivien Leigh was given an Academy Award ranking by the professionals in Hollywood, not only because of her performance in "Gone With the Wind," but also because of the versatility she shows in her current film, "The Sidewalks of London."

Zippy Comedy Is on View At the Earle

Bedroom Farce Is Frisky Entertainment; Eddy Duchin Scores

Is bedroom comedy on its way back? After seeing Joel McCrea barge into a lady's boudoir and successively take refuge in a closet, under the bed and in the bathroom, the question is inevitable. If "He Married His Wife" is a testing ground for the advisability of reviving those bedroom farces that used to run for years on Broadway, it's only fair to say that yesterday's Earle audience took to it like ducklings to a swimming pool.

There's a fine, fresh breath of the madhouse, too, in "He Married His Wife." It starts off as a story about a fellow who's tired of paying alimony and schemes to get his ex-wife married off as a matter of balancing his own budget more satisfactorily. Then with the inconsistency of males, he gets his hackles up when a couple of other esquires start to pay court to his alimony collector.

Most of this horsing around (that reminds us, there's a horse racing angle to the story, too) takes place at a house party presided over by Mary Boland in a role that's similar to, but even more fruity than the one she had in "The Women." This rare gathering includes a young man who's studying yogi and a complete stranger who pops in and kisses Mary heartily. When her husband asks her why she permitted kisses from an unknown, she says indignantly, "There's such a thing as hospitality." That gives you an idea.

Someone in the Hays office must have been taking a good sound nap when many of the lines in this hilarious celluloid were passed. Not that they're objectionable. They're funny and very fast, so fast that some of them seemed to escape the audience.

A wedding scene to stop all wedding scenes is the picture's greatest contribution to what is called the motion picture art. To begin with, the marriage license is in the wrong name, causing some technical difficulty, since the officiating town mayor objects to marrying folks who haven't a license. Then the butler lugs in a portable radio broadcasting the big race of the day. The mayor gets all tangled in the marriage words until youre not sure whether you're listening to a horse race or seeing a wedding.

This charivari is brightly done by a popular cast. But it is Mary Boland who grabs the picture. She's unapproachable as a featherheaded leddy who's married frequently and fearlessly. Nancy Kelly, Joel McCrea, Cesar Romero and Bruce Cabot all gambol pleasantly through the slippery action.

There's a nicely diverting Popular Science short in color. The newsreel shows some of the most nightmarish canines ever photographed in its shots of the New York kennel show.

Eddy Duchin was greeted with applause, but he saved his famous piano soloing for the climax of the show. A cluster of clever and well variegated acts occupied the spotlight in addition to the Duchin orchestra. Roy Davis hit the bulls-eye with, of all things, pretending to sing along with a phonograph. Ray and Trent lift acrobatics into the realm of smart comedy. June Robbins and Johnny McAfee give a new twist to "Oh! Johnny, Oh!" Lew Sherwood does some fantastic trumpeting in the Dixieland, Whiteman and Duchin styles. Stanley Worth barytone "All the Things You Are" handsomely. Ruth and Billy Ambrose dance Oh!" Lew Sherwood does new twist to "Oh! Johnny, some fantastic trumpeting in the Dixieland, Whiteman and Duchin styles. Stanley Worth baritones "All the Things You Are" handsomely. Ruth and Billy Ambrose dance lissomely. It's a show of dancing moods at the Earle this week, in every sense.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Feb. 16. (INS).—Make way for a new star! Joan Fontaine, who is vacationing in New York with her bridegroom, Brian Ahern, will soon take her place with Bette Davis, Norma Shearer, Greta Garbo and the other feminine headliners. She is so good in "Rebecca" that Frank Lloyd took one look at her and forgot all other ideas for a heroine in "Tree of Liberty," the Elizabeth Page best seller. He promptly signed Joan to play the spirited, aristocratic beauty of colonial days.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Joan returns from New York next month and will then go with Cary Grant, her co-star in "Tree of Liberty" to Williamsburg, Va., to play the first scenes in authentic background. This is Frank Lloyd's first production for Columbia and one of the most important pictures of the year. So far the only supporting member of the cast signed is Sir Cedric Hardwicke.

Only an actor as successful as Laurence Olivier would laugh off the clipping a friend of his sent him: "Wuthering Heights with Mr. Scarlett O'Hara," Olivier was delighted with it. He thought it a great joke. I stopped on the "Pride and Prejudice" set to see him and Greer Garson. I meant to stay only a minute but it was so fascinating to see the costumes of the Jane Austin period and to hear the interesting dialogue of that era that I lingered on. I also interviewed Vivien Leigh for a Sunday story. Evenings Vivien and Olivier are rehearsing "Romeo and Juliet" which opens in San Francisco with Dame May Whitty as the nurse and supporting cast of the same excellent caliber.

A sneak preview of "The Westerner," Gary Cooper's next picture, revealed that Doris Davenport, the extra girl chosen as Gary's lead, has unexpected talent. She was formerly called Doris Jordan and was one of the hundreds of girls brought here to test for Scarlett O'Hara. Sam Goldwyn has placed her under long term contract and expects to groom her as a star. That's very nice for her but at the same time a little difficult, since Goldwyn doesn't expect to make a picture until next summer. But I suppose being a star is worth a delay. Sam may, of course, loan her to other studios.

Chatter in Hollywood: Just heard that George Bernard Shaw is sailing for America in March on a lecture tour. He'll come to Hollywood in April. Perhaps he's leaving his own country to get away from the noise of sirens and airplanes. At any rate the 80-odd-year-old playwright is asking $7,000 a lecture—which isn't bad money if you can get it—and I reckon he can. He has always scorned American movies but it's never too late to change.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Herbert Marshall has rented the Ricardo Cortez house. That means wedding bells for him and Lee Russell very soon; Merle Oberon and Alex Korda sail for a holiday in Honolulu as soon as he reaches here. What a wardrobe she is taking with her of clothes designed by Orry Kelly; Gloria Blondell and Bruce Cabo at a tete-a-tete dinner sort of kills the rumor that she and Cubby Broccoli are looking altarward; Judy Garland has dyed her tresses a bright red; Eddie Arnold is celebrating his fiftieth birthday, Sunday, with a dinner for 50; Ray Milland couldn't be happier—he has received his final citizenship papers.

Hal Wallis is choo-chooing east for a week to take a look at "Male Animal," which Warners have bought: Mrs. Blanche Goldie, whose husband, Bob Goldie, was shot a few years ago, has opened a restaurant and night club; Frank Willard, of Moon Mullins fame, who has taken Pep De Alfrew's house, is a California convert. Frank and I were on the Record-Herald together many years ago and we reminisced at the Brown Derby; Sir Victor Sassoon and Mrs. Anita Howard, a Cafe la Maze dinner twosome.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Feb. 16.

The surprising success of the recent reissue of Howard Hughes' "Hell's Angels" originally released in 1930 is the fact that critics claim the picture is as modern as those made today. Why? Because most of the air shots were real, taken in the air. Almost every flying picture made since, has bought scenes from "Hell's Angels," because they couldn't be duplicated. But a glance at the featured player list brought a lump to my throat. There was little Jean Harlow, never to be forgotten. Ben Lyon, abroad these many years with wife Bebe Daniels, now entertaining British soldiers—James Hall, recently mentioned as an entertainer in a New York night club. Lucien Prival, getting a part but seldom—though you'll see him soon in Charlie Chaplin's "Dictator." Frank Clark, still tops as a stunt flyer, he's certainly earned the title of "the man with nine lives."

HOPPER

Douglas Gilmore, unheard of here for many years. Jane Winton, another fugitive from Hollywood, tried concert singing without much success. Pat Somerset, a checker for the S. A. G., and Mickey Neilan, very much in the news but not, I regret to say, in the right way. And yet "Hell's Angels" was made only ten short years ago . . . or do they seem short because I'm growing older? ? ?

Director Mitchell Leisen and his writers have found that the best way to write a mystery script is to emulate the dodo bird who flies backward looking at where he's been. They were having a tough time with the "Night of January 16th." Try as they might they couldn't seem to solve the murder. In desperation, Leisen suggested they find themselves a murderer, apprehead him at the end of the script, then move back through the yarn, tossing in clues and red herrings as they go. The method worked. Now Mitch says he feels just like a pelican ! ! !

Did you know that Thomas Edison was the first man in industry to employ talent scouts? They would visit the various technical colleges, and if they came across any promising youth they'd sign them up on a contract two years before graduation time. He found some of his best men that way. Other industries followed suit—with like results.

Quite a fuss in the House of Parliament the other day when they discussed Duff Cooper's lectures in America. He's the husband of Lady Diana Manners, and former Lord of the Admiralty. They think he's injuring the British cause by his speech making here. I say, let him talk. The more we're told what to do, the longer we'll keep out of their war. When it comes right down to it, we're pretty stubborn about taking the other fellow's advice.

George Kauffman was lunching at the Brown Derby and in the next booth were two Hollywood actresses. He overhead this conversation as they were discussing their boy friends. No. 1 said: "A week ago I was simply mad about Harry. This week I don't care anything about him." No 2 replied: "Isn't it the truth? My, how men change."

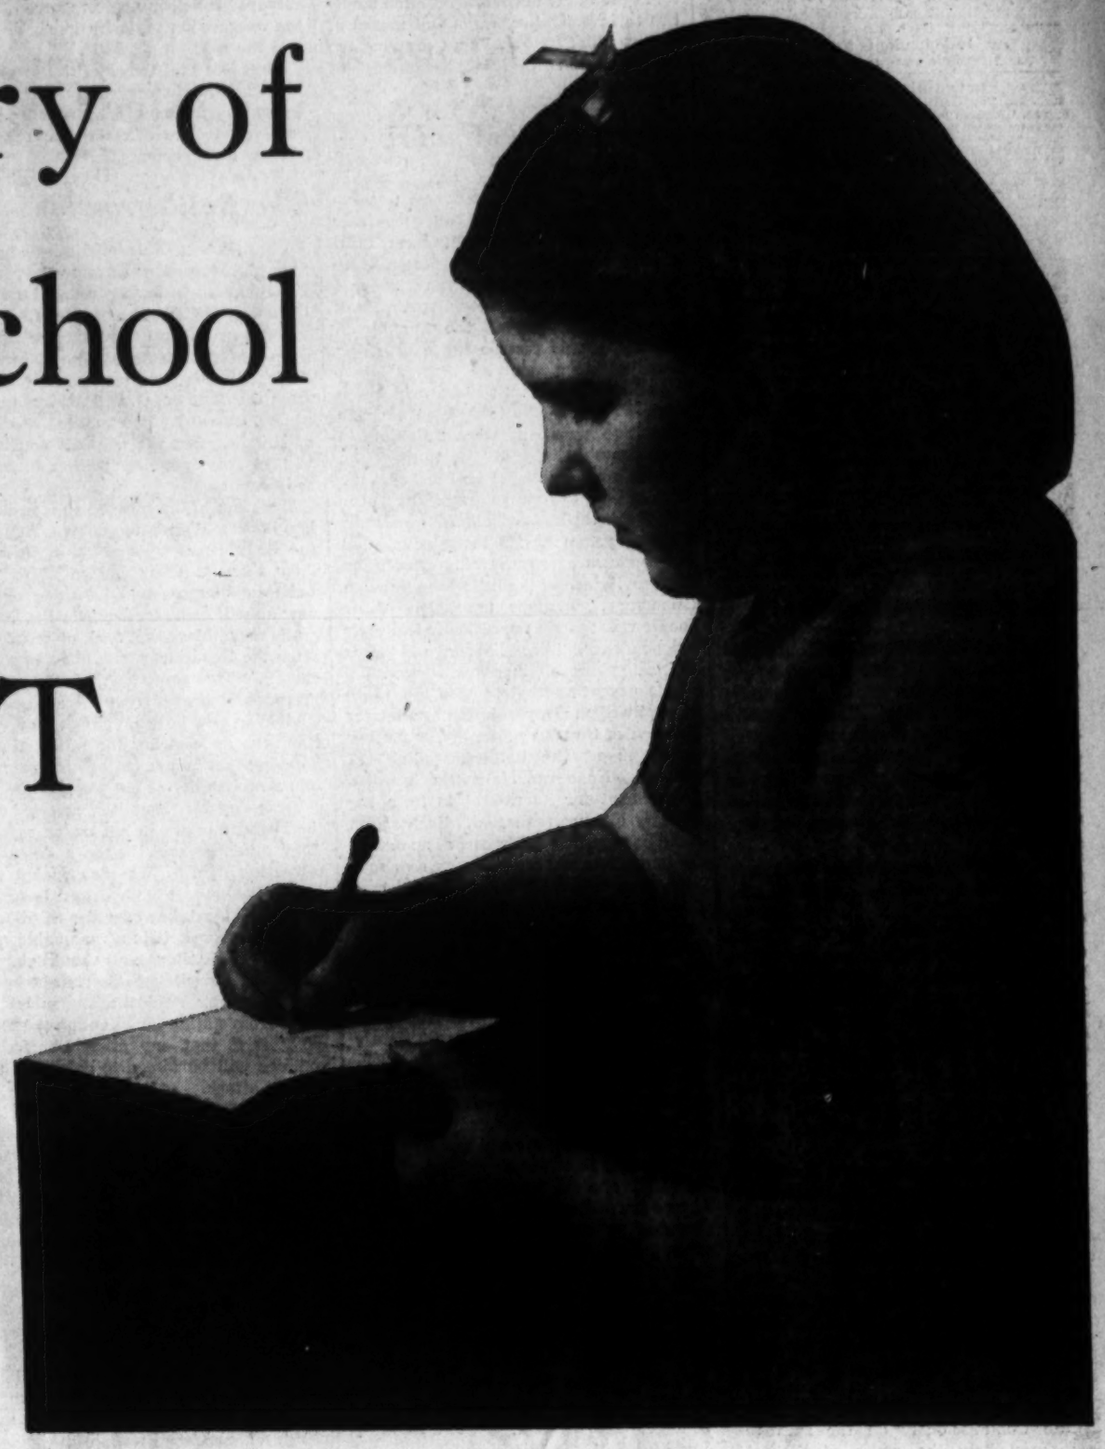
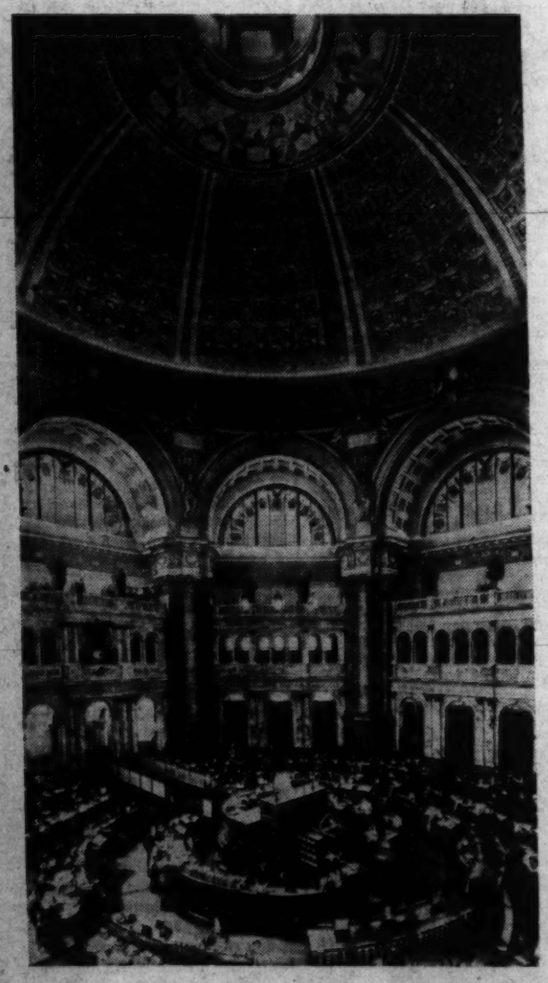
SUNDAY POST



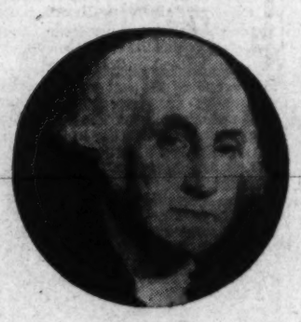
"Well, what did you do in school today?" That's the parent's eternal question. And now The Washington Post brings you the answer, in a series of 8-page picture sections of Washington children in school. The first of these sections will appear in tomorrow's Post and will be devoted to the elementary grades, from kindgarten through the 6th grade. Every parent will be deeply interested in these picture stories of what Washington children learn and how they're taught. Be sure to get your copy of the Sunday Post! Call NAtional 4200 and order it now—there will not be any back copies available.

You'll Enjoy These Articles, Too, In The Big Sunday Post:



Library of Congress

This unusual Harris & Ewing picture of the reading room in the Library of Congress was made by blending 18 photographs, taken at different levels, into the master print. In Sunday's Post you'll get Alfred Friendly's word picture of this great library in operation—its policies, resources, and its bitterly fought-over new librarian.



George's Rules of Manners

Martha's "Great Cake" Recipe

The Washingtons at Home

With all the respect in the world, you can't help chuckling over the rules of table manners in George Washington's diary. Martha Ellyn's Sunday Post article brings you some excerpts, as well as some favorite recipes of wives of early Presidents. (You'll wish you had a slice of Martha Washington's cake.)

Then, in another Sunday Post article, John Chabot Smith shows you the master of Mount Vernon as revealed by his home. You see the statesman-planter planning his estate, enlarging his home, listening to his adopted granddaughter play the harpsichord, entertaining his many guests. It will give you a new insight into George Washington's character.

Garden Page Is Back

The seed catalogues and The Post's first Sunday garden page of the season announce that spring is on the way. Now is the time to plan the garden of your dreams, and here is the page to help you do it.

Graf Spee was only the beginning

The South Atlantic waves that washed over the scuttled Graf Spee did not wipe out the German drive for economic control of South America. Edward Tomlinson, author of "Other Americas" and "New Roads to Riches," sees the war powers fighting to the end for South American products. The Graf Spee episode was only the beginning of the martial phase of this commercial war, says he in the Sunday Post, and predicts that the full co-operation of the United States will be needed to save South America's neutrality.

Not Representative

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee did not succeed in his effort to convert the Board of Commissioners to local suffrage. The city fathers are not even willing to sponsor an elective advisory council. Mr. Randolph deserves some credit, however, for prodding the Commissioners into further clarification of their position, or absence of any position.

One does not have to look far to see why the Commissioners rejected Mr. Randolph's suggestion. To sponsor an elective advisory council for the District would make their plan for reorganization of the local government appear ridiculous. It is not customary in a democracy to lodge power in appointed officials and then elect an impotent group of citizens to advise them. Such a flimsy gesture toward self-government would serve only to magnify the undemocratic aspects of the system Congress has imposed upon the Nation's Capital.

It may be that Congressman Randolph was trying to emphasize the unsatisfactory character of the Commissioners' reorganization bill. He has long been a champion of self-government for the District and representation for Washington's 625,000 inhabitants in Congress. If he now clings to the idea of an elected council, it will probably be only because he hopes to use it as a lever to raise the issues of local suffrage.

In one respect the self-effacing attitude of the Commissioners on the suffrage issue may help the cause of District reorganization. Congress now has convincing evidence that these appointed officials do not reflect the views of the community. At every opportunity the civic organizations of Washington are crying out for a larger measure of home rule. But the Commissioners say in effect that this is a basic issue on which they have no opinion.

There are now indications that some members of Congress are as dissatisfied with the way in which the Nation's Capital is being governed as are its residents. As that feeling grows, the chance of obtaining a genuine District government to control District affairs should be greatly improved.

Local Relief Financing

The Association of Municipal Finance Officers has just concluded a study of the methods employed by over 50 cities in financing relief programs. It reports that only four of these municipalities—New York, San Francisco, Grand Rapids and Erie—have relied to any large extent upon special sources of revenue to cover relief costs. The rest have depended upon regular tax receipts and, when returns proved inadequate, relief services have been curtailed.

The practice has varied in respect to the proportion of outlays covered by current taxes and by borrowing. At one extreme stand the larger cities and counties of California which, generally speaking, have been paying the entire local share of relief costs from regular taxes. At the other extreme stands Minneapolis, which has financed all types of relief from bond issues.

New York City has been conspicuous not only for the large proportion of relief costs covered by current taxes but also for its resort to new revenue sources for relief purposes, such as cigarette, business and utility taxes.

It was not to be expected that any uniformity of practice would be found in municipal financing of relief programs. Some of the cities are able to add to the burdens borne by local property owners much more easily than others. Some are in a position to borrow on easy terms; others are poor credit risks. However, the very small number of cities making any attempt to tap new revenue sources strongly suggests that the majority of municipal governments have followed a highly opportunistic policy in dealing with relief problems.

The cities that have depended heavily upon bond issues to supply a deficiency in current revenues have merely postponed the day when they will have to reform their tax systems unless relief needs decline much more rapidly than seems probable. Those cities that have made insufficient provision for direct relief in order to avoid new taxes may likewise have to take action to bring in additional revenue.

It would, therefore, seem that the Association of Municipal Finance Officers could profitably devote its research facilities to investigating ways and means of raising relief funds without drawing too heavily upon traditional sources of revenue.

Recess Until Monday

The House Banking and Currency Committee discussed nonmilitary assistance to Finland for about an hour yesterday and then decided to recess until Monday morning. At the present rate of progress the measure for an additional $20,000,000 of Export-Import Bank credits, which passed the Senate on Tuesday, should receive approval of the House within a month.

And within a month there may be no more Finland. Yesterday, while the committee members were listening to Jesse Jones' belief that "the spirit of the Finnish people will not be crushed," the Russian legions were smashing ever deeper into the Mannerheim Line. As this defense system begins to be penetrated the shadows of approaching dissolution fall heavily across the little Scandinavian democracy. Perhaps the spirit of its people will remain uncrushed. But their independence, their liberty and their civilization are all in grave danger.

The urgent request for the assistance of the Swedish army, rejected by Premier Hansson of Sweden yesterday, is further indication of the desperate plight of Finland. None can blame the Swedish government for its refusal to form the military alliance requested. Such action could be regarded in Moscow as an excuse for immediate and far-reaching reprisals. And, even without this risk, the German divisions stationed on the Baltic are far too close to Sweden to encourage any but the most cautious foreign policy at Stockholm.

Nevertheless the Swedish decision is shortsighted. If Finland goes under, the jaws of aggression will close more tightly on Sweden, and Norway too. An ever-increasing part of the substance of these two peaceful and highly-civilized countries will have to be devoted to military preparedness. Even so, no sense of security will be afforded.

One by one the small democracies of Europe are falling victim to the pressures exercised against them by the dictatorships. And what stands out is the contrast between the inability of the democracies to work together and the very effective combination of the totalitarian powers. Sweden and Finland have far more in common than Russia and Germany. But the latter pair can operate an aggressive policy in concert. The sister Scandinavian states cannot do the same in their own defense.

It is a world tragedy to see the democratic nations, whose combined power so greatly exceeds that of the dictatorships, being overcome singly by the ruthless tactics of their inferiors. It is a tragedy relieved only by the effective combination formed by England and France, and by the stubborn resistance with which the Chinese are wearing down Japan.

The Finns have also made a stubborn and heroic resistance. A little practical assistance from this country, which would run no risk whatever in lending material aid, would probably have sufficed to turn back the Communist invasion and to give pause to that appetite for conquest which mounts with feeding.

But no practical assistance has been given by America. Whether from abject fear, from indifference, or from divided counsels, the United States has made no more than a gesture of sympathy in behalf of a people whose cause is fundamentally our own. Stalin, and Hitler too, must smile cynically as the Red armies batter deeper into Finland. Their belief that democracies are weak, decadent and ripe for piecemeal destruction is finding substantial confirmation.

The ICC Disposes

In July, 1938, the ICC permitted the Eastern railroads to raise passenger coach fares to 2½ cents per mile, stipulating that the higher rates should be tested during an experimental period of 18 months. The ICC has now denied a petition for continuance of these higher fares in Eastern territory, on the ground that the "future revenue results of the Eastern railroads will probably be more favorable under a 2-cent than under a 2.5-cent basic coach fare."

The ICC may be right in so concluding. Certainly the higher rates did not produce the results hoped for by the carriers. Indeed, within a year of their adoption the roads voluntarily introduced a lower schedule of coach charges based on a sliding scale of mileage rates intended to encourage long-distance travel. However, the roads claim that because of the extensive travel on special World Fair tickets there has been insufficient time to test the results of their present scale of charges as modified by the sliding scale plan. Hence they requested a prolongation of the testing period to the end of October.

The ICC concludes that further experimentation "would serve more to confuse than to add anything of value to the record" for the purpose of determining the matter at issue. The most significant aspect of this decision is that the ICC, as on previous occasions in the recurrent controversy over passenger fare increases, has set up its own judgment against that of the railway managements.

That usurpation of managerial functions has caused certain members of the commission regularly to dissent from the decisions of the majority. But now, as on previous occasions when the ICC and the responsible railway officers have differed, the commission majority issues an order and the roads must obey.

Thus it is that the activities of governmental regulatory agencies encroach by degrees upon managerial functions once reserved to the officials who represent private managements.

The Battlegrounds

Chicago beat Philadelphia by a nose in securing the Democratic convention. Philadelphia yesterday romped home a lap ahead of Chicago as successful bidder for the privilege of having the Republican candidate named within its confines. The political dopesters may conclude from this that the G. O. P. is less certain of Pennsylvania than is the New Deal of Illinois. But the one safe conclusion is that from now on politics is in the saddle.

The place of the convention is probably less important than the dates. This year the Republicans will gather a fortnight later than at Cleveland in 1936. Mr. Farley announces that in a day or two now he will name the date for the Democratic assemblage. It will, of course, be after the Republican candidate has been chosen. The precedent of Republican precedence, broken only once since the Civil War, will be maintained. But John Hamilton at least has the satisfaction of knowing that he has forced his opponents into a probability of hot weather.

Yesterday Mr. Hamilton asserted that the Democrats are in hot water as well. They must, he said, "wage a defensive, retreating fight." Whether or not that proves the case, it is important tactically to say so. And, however the third term issue is resolved, it is a reasonable prediction. If Mr. Roosevelt should elect to run again he will most certainly be on the defensive. And the longer he refrains from stating his intention the more likely it is that any other Democratic nominee will be forced to defend rather than to attack.

The Republican attack will, and should be, vigorous. It should, and one hopes will be, fair. A Presidential election of most exceptional importance is now rising over the horizon. For both sides it is a matter of fundamental patriotism to clarify rather than obscure the tangle of highly complicated issues which lies ahead.

He Says It's Spinach

About two decades ago copious daily dosings of spinacea oleracea (spinach to you) began to supplant the semiannual dosings of molasses and brimstone as the sovereign recipe for a healthy, hearty childhood. For years and years we have been coaxing tons and tons of the stuff down the reluctant esophagi of Young America.

The idea, apparently, was that if we could only get enough calcium into our little girls they would grow up with beautiful, symmetrical teeth like those of Greta Garbo, and our little boys would have fine strong bones like Mr. Joe DiMaggio's. All of us who had ever taken the high school course in dietetics knew that, whatever its aesthetic and gastatory shortcomings, spinach was simply crawling, so to speak, with calcium.

Well, so it is, to be sure. But now comes the eminent Dr. Roger Truesdale to tell us that none of this calcium ever remains very long in the bodies of the little boys and girls who are cajoled or intimidated into swallowing the spinach. When the spinach leaves, the calcium leaves, too. And that's not the worst of it. There is in spinach, it seems, "an oxilate radial" which actually "attracts the calcium away from other foods."

Thus the little girl in the famous New York picture of some years ago, who said it was spinach and, consequently, to hell with it was wiser in her generation than a whole foc'sle full of prodigious Popeyes.

There's no telling what will happen when this news gets into the nurseries. If our children are as intelligent as we fondly believe them to be, they will take opportunity by the forelock and strike at once for an exclusive diet of gum drops and raspberry ice cream sodas.

Virginia Penology

From the Richmond Times-Dispatch

Virginia's major penal system has changed its physical plants and its outlook much in recent years, under the wise administration of the State Prison Board and the excellent executive direction of Maj. Rice M. Youell, superintendent of the Virginia State Penitentiary. The penal system for misdemeanants—the Virginia jail system—has changed little, if any, in 200 years. Aren't two centuries of a steadily increasing jail population enough? It is time to reverse the process, and adopt a penal system that, in its entirety, is designed to decrease the prison population. It is time to listen to Housman when he says:

> There sleeps in Shrewsbury jail tonight,
> Or wakes as may betide,
> A better lad, if things went right,
> Than most that sleep outside.

There may be, in this, a slight poetic hyperbole, but there is no exaggeration when we say that perhaps a fourth of the men in the Virginia State Penitentiary today, and in the jails of the State, could safely have been placed on probation. It would cost approximately 10 cents a day to supervise them adequately on probation, while it costs an average of around 60 cents a day to keep them in jail.

Coming By Train

The memory of that bus ride in the snow was too painfully realistic. Forty minutes late to work, the squall-like look on the boss' face. Nostrils stinging from the stench of gasoline. Bruised feet and aching arms from standing and swinging and shuffling in the jammed aisles.

All that again and then the risk of being 40 minutes late to dinner. It all was too painfully realistic. And—there was a train track that twined through Silver Spring. I knew it was. I had heard the engine's moanful moan and the singing of the tracks. The steel on steel in the middle of the night.

Union Station was only 10 minutes distant.

"Trains for Silver Spring," said the man in the information pen, "why, we've got eight between now and 11:50 tonight!"

Apologetically I approached the ticket window.

The man didn't bat an eye. He took down a ticket, gave it a professional look and pushed it forward.

"Sixteen cents, please," he said.

The train was transcontinental and it was pleasantly filled. A young man across the aisle was reading the New York Sun. In the soft murmurs that filled the car names came to the surface. Names like Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha.

I settled down in my deep plush seat, my 16-cent ticket in my hand. There came that same old moment of excitement when you feel the engine's first tug. We were sliding out of the Union Station.

The snowdrifts and the black rails were beautiful in the early night. The train moved so noiselessly. People spoke so softly. The plush seat so nice.

Three minutes later we swirled past Catholic University. There was the football field—from another view. Thoughts came. Many of them. Not pounding thoughts, but gliding thoughts like the gliding ride my 16 cents had bought.

In a couple of minutes we whizzed past Terra Cotta. Chillum was next, and then Lamond.

The conductor came through the door. From a girl in the front seat he took a long green ticket. From me he took my 16-cent tiny square. But he didn't smile. That was what made so much difference.

The Maryland countryside lay under deep, soft snow. The snow that is never softer than through a train window. A full moon was caught in a Takoma Park oaktree in the east beyond the tracks. On on we went.

North Takoma Park, and finally the call:

"Silver Spring."

I alone got up, but nobody noticed. If they did then I didn't notice. The train stopped and there was a stool to step on.

"Good night, sir," beamed the porter.

I looked at my watch. That ride from Union Station, that magic 16-cent ride had taken 14 minutes.

The big train moved away in the night, taking its passengers on. On and on. Some across America.

My wife was at the little red station, and there was the dog. Home was five minutes more of riding.

We stood on the front doorstep.

"The train ride," I said, "was wonderful. For 16 cents I have felt for 14 minutes like a transcontinental traveler. It does a fellow good. And look what time I got home.

The time had come for philosophy.

"America," I said, "our trains. Our countrysides. Who talks of second class cars and third class? It was third class we took that night in London to Wilson Midgeley's. And, do you remember the look you thought I got when I asked for a one and six ticket to Elephant and Castle?"

"Yes," said Margie quietly.

"Margie, what's the matter?"

"I'm afraid, dear," she said, "about dinner. It may be late and it may not be good. You see, Mabel heard you were coming home by train. She was as excited as I was. I'm afraid she burned the biscuits."

Our Own Racial Problem

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The recent murder of a husband and the wounding of his wife allegedly by Negroes in Snow Hill, Md., was not only a dastardly act, but most regrettable. But it is likewise true that the mutilations of human beings by Loeb in Chicago a number of years ago and the kidnaping and murder of the Lindbergh baby were likewise in the same category, and these were white men.

Personally I am firmly of the opinion that the only way to run a law-abiding nation is by punishing all the lawbreakers through due process of law and according to their violations. But far more potent than the matter of dealing with people after they have committed crimes is the matter of the prevention of criminal tendencies.

Thousands of Americans are now in a sweat trying to get the Jews out of Germany; the Chinese out of the grasp of the Japanese; the Poles out from under German domination; and to make the Finns impregnable to Russian invasion. All of these objectives have their basic appeals.

But at the very same moment the Snow Hill, Md., incident is indicative of the fact that we have not yet begun to rid ourselves of the very same rabid hatred that causes all the bloodshed and misery in Europe. We are still working overtime on ways and means of shunting all Negroes, irrespective of their culture or law-abiding intent, into the squalor, disease and wretchedness that, we long since agreed, aid and abet criminal tendencies.

Then when the criminally inclined Negro breaks the law, our rage is equalled only by our reaction when the intelligent Negro asks for normal citizenship privileges.

By all means, let us continue to help our unfortunate brothers abroad who suffer. But let us also get a little more practical experience at home doing the things we so highly recommend to the offenders abroad.

GEORGE W. GOODMAN,
Executive Secretary, Washington Urban League, Inc.
Washington, Feb. 15.

A Better Peace?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The public seems very much divided on the Administration's latest peace move—the Welles European trip. One school expectantly hopes it is a real peace move, while another school sees it as a political movement to gather material for the fall campaign. Much as I would like to see an early and lasting peace, I can see but little likelihood of this trip accomplishing such an end. Europe looks on Uncle Sam as a very nice but gullible Santa Claus, whose financial resources must ever command respect.

We made the mistake of prematurely ending the last war. Pershing's wish to give the Germans some of their own medicine by forging ahead to Berlin, in the long run would have been the most effective peace movement. Had the Germans been thoroughly beaten and the Versailles Treaty whittled down to a few words assuring all small nations support and cooperation, then I believe there would have been proper respect for the league.

The U. S. A. And U.S.S.R.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There appears to be a disposition in certain quarters to give offense to the Russian people and, indeed, to go so far as to suggest a severance of diplomatic relations with the Soviet government. Such an attitude should not be tolerated. Russia, almost from time immemorial, has been friendly to the United States. The American people have no quarrel with the Russian people, nor are they disposed to fight other people's battles.

W. H. P.
Washington, Feb. 9.

In Unity Our Hope And Strength

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With the granting of financial aid to Finland an accomplished fact, there can be little doubt that we are now several steps nearer active, military participation in a war no sane man desires. Because of this, the prime directive of all working-class groups—unions, political parties, social organizations—is to keep this Nation from embroilment in a new holocaust.

If America does stay out of this war, it will be because of only one reason: the united voice of a united class-conscious, socially-minded working class. Notice the "if"—for not one iota of success can be realized unless genuine unity and harmony can be quickly and securely established.

For far too long a period of time each unit of the left-wing movement has attacked each other unit, spending more vitality, energy, and money on these attacks than has been spent in an attack on a common enemy—the forces of fascism and reaction. This disintegration of the left-wing movement and the establishment of numerous, divided cliques such as the Socialist Party, the Socialist Labor Party, the Communist Party, Trotskyites and Lovestoneites, and so on without end, has been exactly what the leaders of reaction would most desire. There is no strength to the parties of reform and revolt when their every action consists of opposing their fellow workers because of different political affiliations.

It is this very deplorable state of affairs that has already split the Socialist Party and nearly destroyed it. It has reached into the labor movement and split the unionists. Each of us seems to have forgotten that our enemy is not our next-door neighbor, but, rather, a stronger, more vicious being—the warmonger and the economic royalist.

And why is such lack of unity allowed to continue; unnecessarily sapping all our strength and vitality? We have everything that is necessary to build an enduring unity; for our aims are mutual and common to all. Our purposes, our hopes, our desires, our very dreams are the same. We have with us two gigantic issues that demand an end to all hostilities between leftists—no matter what their hue or tint or shade. The first is keeping the Nation out of the war; the second is immediate improvement of working-class conditions here in the United States.

These are our first considerations, but how can we possibly achieve such goals if we are divided? The answer is clear—we must quickly obtain complete unity and accord! The working class must forget past grievances and complaints, for we all have a great task to perform.

When a movement towards unity is once begun it will quickly gather momentum and speed, and with unity ours we are invincible!

Washington, Feb. 15.

Youth's Folly

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Congratulations to the National Youth Congress. I am in my twenties, and although I never received any help from the National Youth Administration I always liked to consider myself one of the boys who might have been helped if the appropriations had been big enough.

Until a week ago I thought that the N. Y. A. had been serving a wonderful cause; that hundreds of millions of dollars had been well spent; that the youth of this country deserved every consideration, for they represent the future of the country.

Since the meeting of the National Youth Congress I have been converted. If the congress was any indication of the feelings of the youth of this country I am ashamed of my own generation and will tell the world that I do not claim to be one of them.

Maybe a few millions should be spent in teaching them Americanism instead of "meism." But I guess all they really need is a good paddling and a short visit among the youth of Russia.

GILBERT B. LAYTON.
Washington, Feb. 13.

Freedom Of The Seas

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On January 19 the Government lost a wise counselor and the American people lost a great champion and defender of civic liberties, justice and equal opportunity—William E. Borah. The late Senator from Idaho fought constantly to preserve those principles and ideals laid out by the founders of the Nation.

Mr. Borah's death was unfortunate in having occurred at the time he was about to expose the acts of the British government—which has been occupying the role of a modern "Captain Kidd" and privateering upon neutral nations. She has towed into English ports more than 50 ships flying the American flag and has rifled our mails. Protests against these humiliating circumstances have poured into the Government every day, but without any effective action.

What the world should demand is freedom of the seas.

Moderation In All Things

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: No honest-minded man or woman in this enlightened country of ours can believe that any statement, purpose or active policy of Franklin D. Roosevelt throughout his two terms as President (or before) has even remotely resembled those of the international gangsters whose activities in Europe and Asia he has on innumerable occasions decried. Nor could such a person, whatever his opinion of New Deal procedure, in honesty believe that that procedure or its planner are leading our country toward the chaos which both he and his defamers abhor.

After reading the news of the "Lincoln Day" launching of the 1940 Presidential campaign, the leaders of either great political party must see the vital need for caution in borrowing this sinister weapon for use in the democracy which they hope to preserve, amid a world aflame with hate and strife.

"Gross Error"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I note a little error—although a Gross one—in the piece about the Lincoln Museum in your paper yesterday. The bill at Ford's the fatal night was "Our American Cousin," not "Child."

Strange View Of Heredity

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It would seem that Lucia Giddens, author of the article about baby adoption published on the front page of The Post of February 12, would make a little better study of the situation she so boldly portrays or, at least, offer a little better interpretation of it. Could I possibly have understood that she considers this wayward mother from the South as a fit parent for any child?

I think your aim is admirable, but I certainly don't think that your first article quite came up to my expectations of The Washington Post. This business of charging fees for the adoption of babies is definitely wrong and is apt to start the baby out in its new home with one strike against it. But I believe you will agree that the fact that a baby comes from poor or ignorant or even feeble-minded parents has absolutely no bearing on the future of a child reared in the proper atmosphere. A child normal at birth will, under normal environment, develop physically, mentally and morally into a normal adult.

Fair Enough

Our Boy Gene

GENE TUNNEY, always an uplifting influence and now engaged in the manufacture and sale of nutritious, character-building whisky, has reached the age at which a man looks back down the years and writes his memoirs. The phrase "back down the years" is a sport-department term used to indicate that the writer has mellowed and grown friendly, usually in connection with reminiscent, dull-day topics, or G. A. T. matter. My Irish friend, Mr. Neal O'Hara, of Boston, whom I have known boy and man, back down the years, was the one who named such pieces so. It means "good any time."

SOME CELEBRITIES resort to literary share-cropping in the preparation of their memoirs, turning over their recollections and their name rights to underprivileged peasants to be worked into shape for the market on a percentage basis. However, I would feel certain that Mr. Tunney does his own patch, if for no other reason than one sentence occurring in his article in the Saturday Evening Post.

"My blindness to the melodramatic punch," says he, speaking of the left hook that put him down in the seventh round of the second Dempsey fight, was caused, I conscientiously believe, by a traumatic astigmatism."

That's the hallmark! That's Our Boy Gene! That's what caused misunderstanding between Mr. Tunney and the Fourth Estate back there down the years. Our Boy Gene was a one for you, and people who had known him around Greenwich Village back down the years used to blink, bat their ears and twitch their scalps in a baffled way and say they just couldn't explain him. And there was nobody, just nobody, who could account for his accent, which was a puzzling combination of stage-drawingroom English, Harvardese and West Side, with occasional faint traces of Shanty, as when he would say, "I am having tea with the duchess."

Now, some of us thought this was an affectation and would try to stick red-head pins in his discussions to mark the spots at which he would forget his accent. But he couldn't be budged, because this was not a standard accent but a home-made one, and men who knew the speech of Oxford and Boston and the Sioux would come away saying Mr. Tunney's dialect undoubtedly had in it something of many tongues but was no more Oxford than Rumanian is Italian and no more New England than Yiddish is Hebrew. It was high-toned and refined, but it was something of its very own. And, as for the great big leg-of-mutton words that he blew into the faces of the honest, God-fearing fight writers, there was no standing up to the man. A party would say, like, for instance, "I hear punching on the cerebellum causes fighters' dance," and our Gene would crack right back. "That is an utter fallacy." And there he would have another enemy.

OUR GENE would never speak about a busted hand but would lecture on the anatomy of the hand and send us journalists reeling away, our heads ringing with metacarpals and phalanges. One day when everyone was acting nice and avoiding any remark that might possibly cause trouble he said Harry Greb had a sure case of periostitis if he ever saw one. This seemed an uncalled-for remark, because, even if a man does pick up something, is that any reason to blab it around? Then, seeing that he had made a scandalous impression, our Gene explained that this was an inflammation of the tissue covering the bone, which probably was Greb's trouble, because his eyes always were badly punched up and the lids puffed out like eaves.

Uncle Will Gibson jumped off a Fifth avenue bus one day and ran away from Gene.

"I just happened to say that the gas from the exhaust wouldn't do a guy any good if he got too much of it," Mr. Gibson explained, "and he starts telling me about some sickness called thesis and the damnedest habeas corpus mandamus potatoes you ever heard. Sometimes you can't understand a word he says."

Just before one of his fights our Gene told one of our set that he was sans souci, and Mr. Gus Wilson—pronounced Gooze Veelson—who operated the training camp known as Goofycrest, explained that he meant he felt okay. That was always the way. He knew more doctor words than a society chiropodist, and he could make a hangnail sound like a basket case.

BUT IT IS JUST his way, and, looking down the years, boy and man, I have learned to roll with his punches.

Even in the grog business our Gene has an air. Now Dempsey runs a saloon with his name on it, but our Gene is a magnate in the alcoholic beverage industry. And only last year, in some fracas within the trade, he challenged his colleagues to discipline the proprietors of the retail outlets, or saloons, and develop a social conscience or perish.

It is no wonder it took some time to know our Gene, back down the years.

Dr. Rauschning Again

HITLER SPEAKS in Hermann Rauschning's "The Voice of Destruction" (Putnam, $2.75). So does Dr. Rauschning, and sometimes it is difficult to disentangle the two voices.

Dr. Rauschning will be remembered as the former Nazi who wrote that analysis of Nazi philosophy, "The Revolution of Nihilism," which was perhaps the most effective anti-Nazi book of 1939. He was president of the Danzig Senate in 1932-'33 when Hitler was coming into power in Germany; as such, he munched cakes with Hitler, drank wine with his lieutenants, sat in at many secret party conclaves. In 1934, for some reason still unexplained, he left the Nazi party and Germany, and, in time, turned bitterly against those with whom he had so intimately collaborated. He bears to Hitler somewhat the same relationship as Raymond Moley to President Roosevelt; and the stories of such former partisans must always be read with circumspection.

His new book consists of a series of notes on conversations with Hitler, jotted down, according to the author, "under the immediate influence" of what he had heard; but one must judge from the material itself, elaborated long afterward. Presumably, the chapters reflect accurately Hitler's mind as it erupted in private conversations in 1932, 1933 and the first half of 1934—Rauschning is curiously vague about the precise date of his "break" with Hitler, if, indeed, he ever "broke." That this 1933 Hitlerian mind is not quite the mind of "Mein Kampf" is obvious; it should also be obvious that it is not necessarily the mind of Adolf Hitler of 1940. As Rauschning himself says, "Hitler can change his opinions completely without even knowing that he is doing so."

Here the man on the eve of power rants: "I shall make war . . . I shall never start a war without the certainty that a demoralized enemy will succumb to the first stroke of a single gigantic attack . . . I shall make any treaty I require. It will never prevent me from doing at any time what I regard as necessary for Germany's interests . . . Terrorism is absolutely indispensable in every case of the founding of a new power . . . We shall provoke a revolution in France as certainly as we shall not have one in Germany . . . Nothing will be easier than to produce a bloody revolution in North America."

Here Hitler plots his new Europe, and his Germanic eugenics. Germany must be a "steely core." Austria, Bohemia, Moravia and western Poland will be Germanized, not by stupidly "colonizing" Germans among the Slavs, but by deporting the male Slavs to farm labor in Germany, and keeping them away from women. "We are obliged to depopulate as part of our mission of preserving the German population . . . I shall keep their men and women separated for years." Sweden and Norway must be forced into alliance with Germany.

THERE SEEM to be contradictions in Dr. Rauschning's own attitudes. Reading, one is puzzled; one attempts to discover where his limit of tolerance was reached, at what point he ceased admiring and turned against this demoniac leader. One discovers that in 1932 he held the Brown Shirts "honorable," and that he flirted with Roehm early in 1934, but put his chief trust in Von Papen. He explicitly states that his "inner revulsion" against National Socialism dates from a conversation in 1933, when Hitler ridiculed and denounced the Catholic Church; but he tells of an intimate collaboration that lasted two years after that. When he first heard of the Reichstag fire he supposed that the story of a Communist plan was real; he was amazed to hear Hitler and Goering boasting and joking about how close they came to being caught at it.

But that did not cause the "inner revulsion," nor did the "inner revulsion" express itself in outer life for another year at least. Even today Dr. Rauschning tells of a friend, "one of the naturally decent party members," still active, who advised him, when he was still in Danzig, to obtain incriminating evidence against his rival, the Gauleiter Forster as a means of securing his position, and to invest his property abroad. Apparently he still admires this man.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Youth And Age

THE AMERICAN YOUTH CONGRESS has come and gone, and there is left behind a sour taste in the mouths of those who were most eager to patronize this organization. They felt that it heralded, not only a sizable vote but also, the eternal springtime in which the weary earth renews itself. But somehow the Youth Congress lacked the charm of youth. Though its adult sponsors welcomed it with paeans of rhetoric about the glory of the young and the inglorious failures of the mature, in person brought them no inspiration and much dismay.

The fact of the matter is that these youths were rather shockingly ill-mannered, disrespectful, conceited, ungenerous and spoiled. They booed the President of the United States, which is never a decent thing to do, even if booing is supposed to be an exercise of civil liberty. They were so rude to the wife of the President of the United States that she had to ask them to be good enough to let her finish what she was saying. They had the impudence to sit in the galleries and boo at the Congress of the United States. They were possessed with the notion that they were in Washington to tell the country what the country owed them but scarcely a word was uttered about what they owe to the country.

THERE HAS BEEN much discussion about how many of them were Communists and how far they are under Communist control. They answered the question beyond any reasonable doubt. As to what communism really is, how it operates, what it leads to, the great majority were obviously almost completely ignorant. A weather vane is in the same sense ignorant of what causes the winds to blow, now from one quarter and now from another. But like a weather vane the opinions of the Youth Congress were nevertheless pointed infallibly by the winds of doctrine which blow from Moscow. As the winds from Moscow have shifted, their opinions have shifted.

It is not necessary to know how many of them are active members of Communist organizations. The fact is that they are hypnotized by Moscow. So they are for the Spanish Loyalists; Moscow supported the Loyalists. They were undoubtedly against Neville Chamberlain when he was trying to appease Hitler; Moscow was then against appeasement. Now they are so super-neutral between right and wrong, between the aggressor and his victim, that Neville Chamberlain is a warmonger and Finland is beyond the pale of their sympathies; Moscow has changed its policy. They are still, no doubt, very sympathetic with the Chinese; Moscow is still supporting the Chinese. If and when Moscow comes to terms with Tokyo, we may depend upon it that the leaders of the Youth Congress will discover that Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek is a Fascist, a warmonger, and that he is trying to draw the United States into war. In short, they are not revolutionists. They are dupes.

WHAT IS SERIOUS about this is not the nature of these opinions, but what has been revealed about how, as a result of recent theories of education, this new generation, or at least an articulate part of it, has learned to form its opinions. So-called progressive education is based on the notion that if you remove authority and discipline and tradition in the upbringing of young people, the unobstructed natural goodness of their hearts and minds will by spontaneous creation bring them to good ideas.

The fact is, however, that if you remove authority and discipline and tradition, what you create is an unsatisfied need, a vacuum, which is then filled by some other tradition and by some other form of authority. Thus you emancipate the young from the alleged tyranny of their own elders, and, before you know it, they are hypnotized by an alien tyranny. You teach them to believe that their own moral and political and religious tradition is an outworn idolatrous superstitution, and before you can say Jack Robinson, they are worshiping the idols set up elsewhere.

OUR GENERATION, the one to which Mrs. Roosevelt belongs, has made many mistakes. One of its very greatest mistakes has been to misunderstand and then to break down the true relationship between youth and age. The true relationship is, so to speak, vertical—father and son, teacher and pupil, thinker and disciple, master and apprentice. In this relationship experience is transmitted to the young and vitality is renewed in the mature.

WE HAVE SUBSTITUTED a horizontal relationship in which we segregate the young in youth movements and the aged in old-age movements, and then call it progress. As a matter of fact this segregation is most reactionary, in that it breaks the connection by which the new generation takes possession of experience and improves upon it. This segregation of the generations prevents the young from growing up, and it means that when they become old in years, they remain immature in mind and character.

In the older, and truer, relationship between the generations, there is none of this sentimental foolery about youth as youth. To be young was glorious, no doubt, but it was not a career. To be young was to prepare for the duties and responsibilities to come, and what was respected in youths was not their immaturity but the eternal fact that a boy is going to be a man and a girl is going to be a woman.

And I have a notion that self-respecting young people prefer to be dealt with on that assumption—on the level, so to speak—without being sentimentalized over by their elders or apologized for by middle-aged adolescents. And I have an even stronger suspicion that what causes modern youths to have so little respect for their elders is just this sentimentality, this being patronized, condescended to, and flattered and petted. For when they see their elders carrying on in this fashion, their elders do not seem to them properly grown up.

Japan Weighs Plan To Support U. S. Missions in China

Tokyo (Saturday), Feb. 17 (U.P.).—Japan will continue efforts to restore friendly relations with the United States, but at the same time will press forward with her plan to launch a Japan-sponsored national government for China in Nanking, government spokesmen said yesterday. They spoke in a debate on foreign policy in the budget subcommittee of the lower house of the Diet.

Indicative of the desire to remove what the Japanese consider a "complete misunderstanding" on the part of the American people of Japan's role in the Far East, Deputy Hajime Hoshi suggested that the government appropriate 10,000,000 yen (about $2,400,000) for support of American mission institutions in China. He said American mission workers have done much to raise the cultural level of the Chinese people.

Foreign Minister Arita promised to study the proposal.

Bridges Asks End Of 'Fantastic' Gold And Silver Buying

Denver, Feb. 16 (AP).—Senator H. Styles Bridges (Republican), New Hampshire, demanded tonight an end to the Government's "fantastic policy" of gold and silver buying "in the interests of all the American people and, in the long run, those of the entire world."

The Republican Presidential aspirant asked:

"What will happen when the war is over if we find ourselves in possession of nearly all of the world's supply of gold is a situation which Administration officials do not like to face?"

He coupled his indictment of the Roosevelt monetary policies with an attack on the Administration's trade agreement program and proposed curbs upon the powers of the National Labor Relations Board and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The Thrill That Comes Once in a Lifetime

The Trade Pacts

By Mark Sullivan

A Fight Unlikely

WHEN THIS CONGRESS met in January, a frequent comment was that its greatest battle would be over the "trade pacts," the reciprocal trade agreements which Secretary of State Hull has been negotiating for some six years past. But apparently it is not going to be an especially great battle.

In a Congress made up as this one is, with the Democrats a large majority in the Senate and a considerable majority in the House, there cannot be a really great battle—certainly not an exciting and uncertain outcome—except when the majority party divides. And apparently the Democrats are not going to divide seriously on the trade pact bill. In the Ways and Means Committee (where the bill has been under hearings) 14 Democrats voted to report the bill favorably. All the Republicans—10—voted against it. One Democrat declined to take a position. He voted "present." He is from Oklahoma, one of the States where the trade pacts hurt somewhat, because they permit import of farm products from abroad.

The bill is now in the House, and much of next week is to be devoted to debating it. In the House, the division will probably be much as it was in the Ways and Means Committee. Prevailingly the Democrats will support it. Prevailingly the Republicans will oppose it.

FOR THE DISPOSITION of the Democrats to support the bill without much defection, there are several reasons. One is precisely the wish to avoid a "great battle." In these months preceding a Presidential election, the Democrats wish to avoid cleavage so far as they can. In their general situation, in the third term issue, in the strife between the New Deal and regular wings of the party—in all that there is more than enough dynamite to make the party leaders apprehensive. So far as they can avoid any division of their party on matters coming up in Congress, they will try to do so.

The wish to avoid cleavage accounts for much that happens—and especially for much that does not happen. Even President Roosevelt feels the urge toward harmony, and he is not a person greatly given to peace and placation. Recently he prepared, to be sent to Congress, an order rearranging certain government bureaus. In it, the Bureau of Forestry was to be transferred from Secretary Wallace's Department of Agriculture to Secretary Ickes' Department of the Interior. When Democratic leaders in Congress heard of this, they told Mr. Roosevelt it would start a row. He abandoned the order.

Much of the disposition of the Democrats to support the trade pacts measure arises from esteem for Mr. Hull. The Democrats, and Republicans also, respect him and like him. Many feel he ought to have another chance, for another three year period, to see what he can accomplish with his reciprocity idea. During the six years since the power was first given him, the world has not been in a condition favorable to Mr. Hull's purpose, which is to increase international trade, everywhere throughout the world.

The trade pact statute gives Mr. Hull authority to negotiate reciprocal tariff agreements with other nations. He reduces the tariff on foreign goods coming into the United States—as an example, lace from France. In return, France reduces the tariff on certain American products going to that country. Pacts of this general type have been negotiated with some 22 countries.

But the effect of these pacts does not stop with one country. When Mr. Hull reduces the tariff on lace from France, that reduction is applied to practically every other country in the world. This is done in pursuance of what is called the "most favored nation" policy. In many preexisting treaties we have made in the past with many nations, we promise to give to those nations the same tariff rates as we give the "most favored" nation. Consequently, the tariff on lace from France becomes also and at once the tariff on lace from Belgium and Japan and China and many other countries. And the same as to every commodity that we include in our reciprocal pacts with any country.

CLEARLY, THESE TRADE PACTS are not merely agreements restricted to one nation; they are, in effect, general tariff reductions applying to goods from all nations. It is a method of tariff reduction, one commodity at a time. For this one-at-a-time method there is much support from persons who deplore our former method of making tariffs. That was, to lump all commodities and all rates and all countries into one omnibus tariff bill, to be enacted by Congress, usually on a "log-rolling" basis.

The larger virtue claimed for the Hull trade pacts is altruistic and world-wide. Mr. Hull's theory runs thus: The chief cause of war is economic discontent of peoples. The best cure for economic discontent is international trade. Hence increase of international trade is the best path to peace. Many persons have strong faith in this theory. Admittedly, world conditions just now make it difficult to put the theory in practice. It is a preventive of war, attempted after war is under way. But the war will end some time, and supporters of the Hull principle wish to have it ready to apply when peace comes.

SUMNER WELLES
The possibilities of the success of his peace mission are analyzed below in the special article by Livingston Hartley

Is Peace Possible?

By Livingston Hartley

Significance Of The Welles Mission

Special Correspondence.

AS THE DAYS LENGTHEN, the whole Western world is filled with foreboding of what the spring may bring. The threats of Hitler and, more important, the position in which he now finds himself indicate that it is liable to bring a German drive for victory which will launch "total war" upon the west.

Although there is considerable confidence among the democratic peoples that such a German drive will fail, there is fear among all thinking men of what "total war" may do to Europe.

This fear has impelled many neutral leaders of opinion to urge that an effort be made to negotiate peace before "total war" is unleashed. There are suggestions for an early armistice, in order that the belligerents, whose suffering and loss of life has as yet been relatively insignificant, may at least try to reach a settlement which will avert this mutual destruction. As has happened so often in China, the mobilized might of each party would then be used, not to seek a decision by battle but as determinants of strength in negotiation.

IF AN ARMISTICE were declared now, the German government could claim to have won the war. Surface factors, such as the possession of most of Poland and the maintenance of the frontier in the west, would support this claim, whereas underlying factors, such as the progressive attrition of the blockade and the declining prospect of ultimate German victory, could not be so easily evaluated by the belligerent peoples.

An early armistice might hence have a very damaging effect upon Allied morale. After years of retreat before the Nazi menace in an effort to preserve peace, the British and French people are now keyed up to the task of terminating this menace by war. In these circumstances, a halt in the fighting, followed by lengthy negotiations, might cause such a deterioration in their fighting spirit that they could not resume the struggle if Germany refused an equitable settlement. The Reich government, on the other hand, with its totalitarian strangle-hold on its own people, might be more ready to resume the war and thereby succeed in imposing a peace disastrous to the rest of Europe.

The Allies have other compelling reasons to refuse an armistice at this time. To relinquish the blockade even temporarily would allow Germany to enhance her capacity to continue the war. A breathing space would permit her to improve the organization of war material supplies from Russia and the Balkans. And even if it were possible to convert the breathing space into an actual peace, the only kind of settlement obtainable by this procedure might leave the Reich the strongest military power on the continent, able to renew her drive for domination of Europe under conditions far more auspicious for success than those she confronts now.

These considerations suggest that the Allies and all Americans who believe their success essential to the future welfare of Europe and the whole Atlantic area have reason to oppose a movement for an armistice now. Whatever the destruction that the war may bring, they may be expected to consider it a lesser evil than the consequences of a German victory for Europe and the world. But an armistice is not the only approach to peace negotiations available now. There is another which appears far safer at the present time.

The United States now occupies a far more powerful and influential position in regard to Europe than it did in 1916. Our industrial, financial and naval strength is relatively far greater, and President Roosevelt is much more respected and admired in most European countries than President Wilson was 24 years ago. Our Government, moreover, may now look for support, where desirable, to the Papacy, the Belgians, Dutch and most of the smaller neutrals, and even Italy, in any diplomatic exploration of a possible basis of peace.

Such exploration by the United States would have totally different implications from an effort to bring about an armistice. While it was under way, the belligerents could still maintain their maritime campaigns of attrition, neither side losing such advantages as it brought. And the war on the Western Front could still continue in its present form. But, obviously, any hope that our exploratory efforts might open a way to the restoration of peace would be shattered if, during their progress, the belligerents unleashed a "total war."

The Allies are unlikely to initiate such a war in the west because they believe that time is on their side. And the German government might find difficulty in justifying a dangerous and costly offensive to its own people while even the slightest prospect of peace by negotiation were in view. Thus American exploration of the possibilities of peace should tend directly to postpone resort to "total war" in the west and the extension of the war over neutral Europe.

Postponement of "total war" is now of great importance to all the belligerent peoples. As long as the bombing planes have not loosed their destruction upon civilian populations, and as long as the theater of the war is limited to one corner of the continent, there will be some hope that a way may yet be found to a satisfactory peace which will avert many months or years of mutually destructive struggle. Time, moreover, will allow the war of attrition to proceed further and indicate more clearly to the warring peoples what the ultimate outcome of the conflict will be.

It does not seem, furthermore, that the cause of the Allies and the American interests bound up with their cause would be adversely affected by this kind of American diplomatic action. Their objectives, so far as they have been defined, appear far closer than Hitler's to those of neutral opinion, as indicated in many pronouncements of the President and Secretary Hull and set forth in the five-point program of the Pope. In any exploration of a basis of peace, therefore, success would depend primarily upon how far the Reich was prepared to make concessions.

WHEN SO MUCH is at stake for western civilization, many Americans feel that our Government should take some action. This we are now doing by sending Mr. Welles to confer with the leaders of the belligerent nations. Although there is little prospect that his mission will lead to serious peace negotiations among the warring powers, it appears likely to serve one very valuable end. That is the postponement of the orgy of destruction which Europe has feared will accompany the arrival of spring.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Whispering Thespians

WHAT'S BECOME of the old-fashioned actor who used to want the audience to hear his lines?" demanded Elmer Twitchell, the well-known seal hunter, Valentine designer and man of arts, today. "It's several seasons since I have gone to the theater and heard much of what the leading performers said."

"It seems to me," he continued, "that the fellow who gets top rating in the theater today is the actor who regards his lines as a matter of confidence between himself and the author.

"It used to be a cardinal rule of the acting profession to speak clearly and distinctly, in the constant realization that even the people who were back of the sixth row were entitled to know what was going on. Even if he sounded a little noisy to the people in rows A, B and C, it was all right.

"But gradually there has come over the theater the idea that no play is really done properly and with the true realism unless the performers all behave as if swapping racing tips. I can name a dozen famous actors and actresses in big Broadway plays whose main idea seems to be to keep the dialogue from getting into general circulation.

"They are really giving their performances in pantomime!"

Elmer tore up and stomped on the program of one of the season's big hits, starring an actor famous on stage and screen. He was quite indignant. "I'm told this was not a bad show," he snapped. "But I wouldn't know, I WENT to it instead of reading the book!

"I sat in the tenth row of this rather small theater and this actor talked lower than an intruder in the reference room in a public library. He is an outstanding member of the realism school. Now I am all for realism, and I would not want to see the return of the old-time hams who used to bellow all over the theater, but I still do think realism calls for actors and actresses talking as if they were afraid of scaring mice.

"After all, a theater is a theater and not a cozy nook in a sound-proof bungalow.

"It is bad enough to have the modern plays so devoid of action without having to have the words mumbled, inhaled and kept in the strictest confidence between the paid performers. Some of our most celebrated women performers are worse than the men in this hush-or-you-may-wake-a-baby school of acting. I have seen them walk away back stage, make sure they were out of hearing and then turn their back on the audience before speaking their lines!

Republicans Get Ready—Name Time and Place

The Republicans had the limelight yesterday as their national committee met in Washington and the best a Democrat could get was a challenge to nominate President Roosevelt for a third term. With noisy enthusiasm over G. O. P. prospects, they voted to hold the national convention in Philadelphia, June 24.

Snooty Gin Mills At the Busy Hour Look Like London Pubs

New York, Feb. 16.

Alice Hughes

MY BUSINESS keeps me scooting around the middle section of Manhattan Island, where most of everything happens, and occasionally I am lured into one of the snootier neighborhood pubs—the modern type of gin-mill all done in red leather and chromium and mirrors. Not being a drinking woman, I can nurse a mild aperitif along for nigh onto an hour, which would probably label me what the young lads call "a cheap date."

This also gives me a good chance to study the social scene in these fancy saloons, and the oftener I behold it the more I learn about the drinking habits of many business New Yorkers between the hours of five and seven. They behave like the denizens of the poorer public houses in London, who just pour it down frantically as closing time approaches. To see the local phenomenon at its best and worst, you should fight your way into one of these handsome dispensaries in the heart of the midtown business district, preferably one on the ground floor of a skyscraper.

There are as many women as men lined up along the bar, released from desks and grabbing a few quick ones as a prelude to dinner and the evening's affairs. I see girls who are probably secretaries of the better type, march up against three or four dry martinis at six in the evening, which envelopes them in a delicate haze. The crowds are enormous, thirsty and extremely chattering. A New York cocktail bar is no place to loaf and invite the soul. The clatter is terrific, and customers should be given ear-plugs at the door.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Who remembers Olga Baclanova, the beautiful blonde Russian woman who appeared in many silent movies? She came to this country with a troupe from one of Moscow's theaters, and stayed on. I'd sort of lost track of this lovely Muscovite, and then, not long ago she turned up singing songs in the Persian Room of the Hotel Plaza, one of the town's choicest spots where Eddy Duchin plays on, year after year. I was glad to see that Baclanova is just as lovely to look at as ever.

We saw Mrs. Mary Fahnestock off on her exploring trip with her two strapping sons, Bruce and Sheridan. They are on a 40,000-mile trip to the South Seas to gather things for our great Museum of National History.

For Potential Hedy LaMarrs— Sharp Contrasts of Black, White

The type of gown every other woman wishes she could look seductive in is this brilliant black and white. The heady Hedy Lamarr will wear this exotic modern costume in her newest film, "I Take This Woman." Coal-black crepe makes one bat-like sleeve, which ends in a long panel, looping under the leopard-buckled belt and draping to the floor. The rest of the "dinner gown" is white crepe draped in correspondingly euphonious folds

Toll House Cookies Make Delightful Crunches

THE TOLL HOUSE at Whitman, Mass., is a famous New England inn where many delicious foods originate. Both the chocolate cookies and the chocolate oatmeal cookies served at the inn are delicious. Do not overlook these delicious cookies for whatever I may say in their praise would be an understatement. The recipes for them follow:

Chocolate Cookies

Cream 1 cup butter and add ¾ cup brown sugar, ¾ cup granulated sugar and 2 eggs beaten whole. Dissolve 1 teaspoon hot water and mix alternately with 2¼ cups flour sifted with 1 teaspoon salt. Lastly add 1 cup chopped nuts and 2 economy size (7 ounces each) semisweet chocolate which has been cut in pieces the size of a pea. Flavor with 1 teaspoon vanilla and drop by half teaspoons on a greased cookie sheet. Bake 10 to 12 minutes in oven at 375 degrees. Makes 100 cookies.

Chocolate Oatmeal Cookies

Cream ½ cup butter or other shortening with 1 cup brown sugar. Add the grated rind of 1 orange. Add 1 egg, 1 teaspoon vanilla, ¼ teaspoon salt and beat well. Stir in ½ cup flour and 1½ cups rolled oats. Add 1 economy size bar semisweet chocolate—each square cut into 4 pieces nad work into the batter. Form into small mounds on a cookie sheet and bake for 15 to 20 minutes at 350 to 375 degrees.

New Male Attire To Rival Indians In Color Scheme

Palm Beach, Fla. (AP).—Mere man, his drab appearance a fashion target for a score of years, faces a new assault in 1940 designed to make his garb rival the Seminole Indian's in color.

Although masculine resistance continues high, some males are exhibiting the fancy array advanced by fashion makers.

The jib jacket is seen in Southern resorts. Its colors are canary, cerise, bright orange and green. It has sleeves like a bishop's and is made of corduroy, imported linen and cotton.

Trousers made of sailcloth in jewel tones are worn with the jacket. The outfits are designed for fishing and general sports wear.

Can't you imagine a street full of them in Chicago, Cheyenne or Sheboygan? Yet, they are worn here in midseason without fear or embarrassment.

You Are Just as Old as Your Body Is Supple

Muscles Should Be Flexible Whether Age Is 16 or 60

By Ida Jean Kain

SEE HOW far sideward you can bend without taking your feet off the floor. Stand with the feet parallel but wide apart, then bend sideward at the waist. The less you bend, the more you need it!

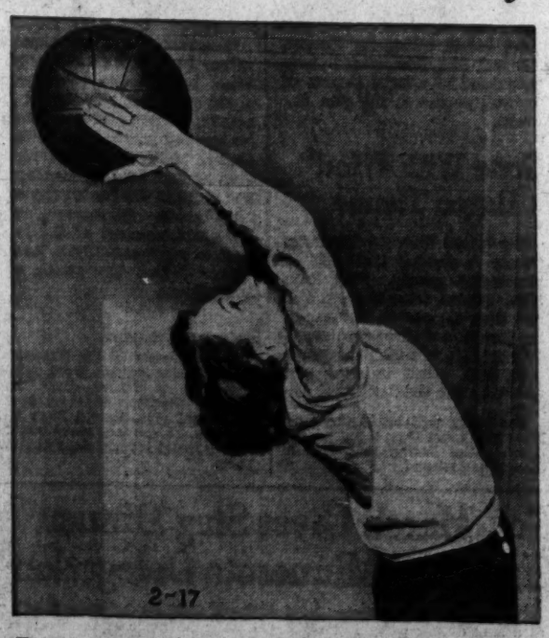
Whether you are 16 or 60, there are certain tests of suppleness you should be able to pass. The side-bend is one of them. Suppleness isn't a question of how old you are. It's a question of how young you keep your body.

Here's one you should be able to do with the greatest of ease! Stand erect with the arms straight out in front, chest level, palms of hands together. Keeping the arms at about the same level, swing them backward and try to touch the hands together in back. Keep swinging! They'll touch!

The Deep-Knee Bend

An excellent test of joint flexibility is the deep-knee bend. Without shoes, stand with feet flat on the floor and slowly bend the knees—without letting the heels rise off the floor—until you are in a squatting position. Any creaks? Any aches? Then you'd better bend your knees more often! If you have a little trouble at first, don't let it stop you. This is one of the exercises practiced most diligently by the girls who take up skiing, and who discover they are not as supple as they should be.

Now, if you have made out pretty well with those, we can go on to some real tests. Take this one: Stand on the knees on the floor, with the knees wide apart. Sit back on the floor, between the knees. All right so far? Now, clasp the hands back of the head with elbows straight out from the shoulders. Finally, bend sideward to touch the right elbow to the right knee—try it! Stretch the trunk upward, then bend to the left and try to touch the left elbow to the left knee. You may no be able to do that one for awhile but it is worth practicing, for it is as good a waistline exercise as you will come across.



To test your suppleness, try 73-year-old Grandma Reilly's favorite exercise: Toss a medicine ball overhead for 25 counts, then finish by holding the ball overhead as you rotate at the waist

Success in Tests Quickly Determines Physical Condition

This last is a real test of flexibility if ever there was one: Lie face downward on the floor, bend the legs back at the knees, and try to reach back with the hands and grasp the ankles. Once you get in that fix, the idea is to rock back and forth with a rhythmical roll. This is a good exercise, too—it gives you a nice, flat front line!

If you can pass those tests, you are in good condition. If you can't, there's an exercise program all cut out for you. And just to encourage you or put you to shame, read this excerpt from a recent letter: "At 63, I am strong and vigorous and as flexible as a girl. I am a firm believer in exercise. I know what it means to a woman's health and appearance."

Predatory Men Don't Confine Their Attentions To Divorcees, Says Bachelor Girl

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: First let me say that I missed your column very much during the week of February 5, as did several friends whom I heard mention the omission. And now to the point: With regard to the divorcee's letter which appeared in the issue of February 9. She complains that all her suitors demonstrate "dishonorable" intentions, and attributes it to the fact that she is a divorcee. Well, I am just her age, 27, and I am unmarried. Yet all my "datable" life, I've had the same thing to contend with.

I've tried every technique and method of preventing or deflecting such occurrences (or recurrences) and I have yet to devise the one that meets all situations and emergencies, which will let me "eat my cake and have it, too"—that will enable me, in other words, to uphold my standards and keep my beaux.

A strictly platonic relationship usually doesn't stand the gaff of many dates before the gentleman (?) takes himself off to greener pastures, after implying that the girl is unnatural because she fails, or refuses, to respond to his advances. Occasionally, I let it get me down, more or less. But then I rally again and go on foolishly hoping that some day the impossible will happen; that some day I will actually meet a man who believes in tying the knot legally before asserting prossessor's rights. I suppose this makes me very UNSOPHISTICATED.

The Socal Attitude Of the Sophisticate

DEAR UNSOPHISTICATED: The popular concept of the "sophisticate" is a person who is slightly hardboiled. Or, perhaps better said, a realist who looks—but philosophically—upon human nature with disillusioned eyes, and is coolly determined to get at least as good, but preferably better, than he gives. Let it be said of him that he does, for the most part, execute all bargains (including emotional transactions) on his own terms.

Ergo, the truly sophisticated woman doesn't expect a man to be fashioned in Galahad's likeness, nor to pay her a Romeo's court. On the contrary, she is prepared to concede, at the outset, the likelihood that he considers her fair game, and will stalk her with ruthlessness intent if the chances seem favorable.

Knowing what to expect (or being prepared for the worst, if you like), she is in easy command of the situation from first to last, and her nonchalance is both shield and magnet in romantic skirmishes. She would never seek to hold a man (either at bay or to heel) by piteous pleas and protestations. He takes her company, her manner implies, either on her terms or not at all. So figure it out for yourself—are you sophisticated or not? M. H.

She Must Leave Home Or Be 'Kicked Out'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I know you help young girls in distress and I would certainly appreciate any help or advice you can give me. I am 18 years old and unmarried. I have no job at present and I am expecting a baby in several months. The father of my unborn child has run away and deserted me.

My home surroundings are miserable. I have five sisters and my father has a very poor understanding. He has threatened to kick me out if I don't leave on my own accord. Now that you know my circumstances, can you tell me of some home or hospital in Washington where I might go and be taken care of? Gratefully yours, IMO.

Where to Turn For Succor

DEAR IMO: I suggest that you make application for admittance to the Florence Crittenton Home, located at 4759 Reservoir road northwest, in Washington, D. C. Girls are received at the home as early in pregnancy as they wish to enter, and they may remain there until the baby is six months old.

While there, they are instructed in the homemaking arts and in baby care, and every effort is made to prepare the individual mother to be self-supporting by the time she is ready to leave. Patrons and officials of the home also assist mothers in making plans to keep their babies without painful loss of self-respect.

If possible, make an appointment for personal interview with Miss Anne Rogers, the case worker at the home. Since you are not a resident of Washington, it might be well to write her a letter, asking if you are eligible there; and, if not, where she thinks you had best apply. You may be sure of her "good understanding" and immediate attention. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Woman's 'Touch' In Making Cans

Pittsburgh (AP). — Brawny men turn out millions of tons of tin plate a year in the steel mills that dot this center of heavy industry, but it's dainty young girls with lacquered fingertips who pass on their work.

Some 2,000 women help this district produce tin plate in greater quantities than any other steel manufacturing center in the world. Tin plate goes into cans to hold food and drink, and has a thousand other uses.

Charles A. Kral, superintendent of the tin plate division of the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation's nearby Aliquippa mill, explained that it takes a woman's deft, gentle touch to detect flaws in tin plate.

For Gleaming Metals

We all love the gleam of brass or copper, pewter or silver, but no one wishes to spend hours in polishing them. To clean, use a fine silver polish or a metal polish definitely intended for brass or copper. Newly polished candlesticks, vases and other ornaments may be evenly covered with a thin coat of colorless lacquer to keep them from tarnishing. Go over the piece with denatured alcohol before applying the lacquer. Or you may use a preparation which gives a protective coating on silver. This product washes off with hot water and soap.

Floor Covering Care

Rugs and carpets should be cleaned regularly. Your carpet sweeper will quickly remove surface litter when doing the morning work, and the regular use of your vacuum cleaner will keep the dirt from settling into the pile of your rugs. It gets the dirt while it is still on the surface of the rug. In using your vacuum cleaner, be sure the nozzle is adjusted to the rug; then it will not be necessary to go over the rug more than twice to remove threads, dog hairs and other litter.

Dinner to Greet Australia's Envoy Already Arranged—He Is at Sea

Keith Officer to Be His Host March 2; Augusto Rossos, Recalled From Russia, Visit Old Post at Embassy Here

Richard Casey, first Australian envoy ever to be named to this country, is presumably somewhere in midocean at this point, en route here—but nevertheless a dinner has already been arranged to welcome him when he arrives in the Capital next week. The host will be Keith Officer, Australian Counselor of the British Embassy, and the date Saturday, March 2.

Mr. Officer has been house and office hunting for the new Minister and has already picked out a chancery on Twenty-fourth street.

Much interest centers in Australia's first envoy here. Both Mr. Casey and his wife—she will join him about ten days after his arrival—are ardent aviation enthusiasts and pilot their own planes. Mr. Casey, who has had a distinguished career in public service, has made several trips to this country in past years, and two seasons ago paid a brief visit to Sir Ronald and Lady Lindsay at the British Embassy. Mrs. Casey accompanied him.

Meanwhile, entertaining in the Capital is centering about another diplomatic couple—the attractive Augusto Rossos, who are here renewing old friendships. Signor Rosso, Italian Ambassador to the Soviet, was "temporarily recalled" by his government some time ago, so he took this opportunity for his first visit to this country since he served as Ambassador in Washington.

Signor Rosso was one of the most popular envoys ever to represent his country here, and his wife, the former Mrs. Frances Wilkinson Bunker, made a host of friends when she lived here before their marriage. So it is not surprising that they are whirling from luncheons to teas and on to dinners during the few days of their visit.

To Be Colonna's Guest at Embassy

The Italian Ambassador and Princess Colonna will give a luncheon today at Signor Rosso's former home—the handsome embassy on Sixteenth street. Tomorrow, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss will fete the couple at a luncheon at Dumbarton Oaks and on Monday Mr. and Mrs. James Clement Dunn will be hosts at a similar party for the visitors.

On Tuesday afternoon Mrs. Randall Hagner will entertain at a tea for them and that evening Senor Juan Cardenas, Spanish Ambassador, has planned a dinner. Senor Cardenas was attached to the Spanish Embassy here when Signor Rosso was Ambassador, and the two became fast friends. Senora de Cardenas is vacationing in Charleston at the moment.

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Garrett have invitations out for a luncheon for the Rossos os Wednesday, and the following day they will return to New York. They will sail March 2 to return to Italy—whether or not they go back to Moscow is still in the lap of the powers that be.

Signora Has Been Here Since Christmas

Signora Rosso has been in this country since before Christmas, and her husband joined her several weeks ago. They visited the former's parents in Evanston, Ill., before coming on to the Capital.

Signor Rosso and his wife gave a small informal luncheon yesterday at the Mayflower in honor of the latter's daughter, Miss Adele Bunker. Others present included Miss Betty Beale, Miss Barbara Bolling and Miss Mary Parker.

Incidentally, magnet for all eyes in the Mayflower dining room yesterday was young and handsome Prince Bertil of Sweden, who was talking earnestly with the Swedish Minister, Wollmar Bostrom. The prince has been shying away from Capital festivities to concentrate on his work with the Swedish trade delegation now here. He also spends a good deal of time in New York.

Ladies of the Press Fete Kerenskys

Another visitor to Washington who has been feted high, wide and handsome is Alexander Kerensky, premier of Russia in the period between the Czar's overthrow and the seizure of power by the Bolshvists. Mr. Kerensky and his pretty English wife will return to New York today and will sail shortly for Paris, where the Russian exile runs a semi-weekly paper to promote the restoration of a democratic regime in his homeland.

Several ladies of the press arranged an informal luncheon yesterday for the statesman and Mrs. Kerensky. After coffee and dessert they drew up their chairs and listened while Mr. Kerenski expressed his views on the present sad state of the world.

Regrads Hitler As Stalin's Master

He believes that the Allies will win. In his opinion the annihilation of totalitarianism is the only hope for the future of mankind. If the Germans win, he foresees a return to the Middle Ages, but refuses to visualize such an outcome, believing that it is impossible for man to turn back.

Since the now famous German-Soviet pact was signed, Hitler has become Stalin's master, according to Mr. Kerensky. He thinks that a possible crack-up of the Soviet dictator's regime depends a lot on which side wins the war—Germany or the Allies.

In response to several queries as to the fate of Alexander Troyanovsky, former Soviet Ambassador here, Mr. Kerensky said he had heard that the former diplomat was either in a prison or a concentration camp. He does not know what has become of Mme. Troyanovsky and their son, Oleg, who attended Swarthmore University.

When Mr. and Mrs. Kerensky first became acquainted not so long ago, they did all their conversing in French, as he didn't speak English and she knew no Russian. Mr. Kerensky's command of our language is now excellent, however. Yesterday at the luncheon his wife wore a black frock, simply made, with a black hat trimmed with little ribbon bows and a string of pearls.

Mrs. Roosevelt is expected to arrive at Golden Beach, Fla., today, where she has leased the Ross Judson home, overlooking the sea, for a brief stay.

Walter Schoelkopfs At Palm Beach

Washington colonists at Miami Beach are active in the round of parties now featuring the season at that resort. A gala "Comin' Round the Mountain" party will be held at the Surf Club this evening. Coming down from Palm Beach for the affair will be Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Schoellkopf, of this city and Buffalo.

Mr. and Mrs. John I. Haas, of this city, will arrive at the Tower, in Miami Beach, tomorrow, where they plan to spend several weeks sunning. Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Wire left Miami today for a brief visit to Nassau, after which they will return to Hotel Good for a few days before taking the boat home.

Stopping at the Wofford Hotel from Washington are Mrs. Margaret O'Connor, Miss Ada Gallan and Miss Margaret Gallan. Miss Virginia Foley, of Brookline, Mass., a recent graduate of Mount Vernon Seminary, shared honors with her mother at a Cabanas luncheon given Sunday by the Misses Ann, Agnes and Alice Fitzpatrick, of Brookline.

Counselor and Mme. Molekamp Entertain to Honor Henrik Bos

Informal Cocktail Party Is Held At Georgetown Home for Attache Who Leaves Wednesday for China

Entertaining most informally, the Commercial Counselor of the Netherlands Legation and Mme. Kleijn Molekamp feted Henrik Bos yesterday at a cocktail party from 5 to 7 p. m. at their Georgetown home.

Youthful Mr. Bos, who has been an attache at the legation for the past six months, will return to China, where he was stationed before his arrival here. He plans to leave Washington next Wednesday.

Most of the 150 guests at yesterday's party were friends of his. The hosts with Mr. Bos received in the drawing room, which was filled with spring blooms. Attractive Mme. Molekamp had donned a crepe tea frock in a rose-brick shade, and a rope of pearls completed the ensemble.

Guests Come Early And Stay Late

Guests came early and stayed late to enjoy the pleasant party. Representative and Mrs. John J. Dempsey chatted merrily with a group of friends. Mrs. Dempsey topped her black and white ensemble with a matching turban. The Commercial Secretary of the British Embassy and Mrs. J. P. Summerscale were there, as were Mr. and Mrs. Otaker Kabelac, Mrs. Bissett Norment, Mr. and Mrs. William Lacy and Mr. and Mrs. Francis de Wolf.

Lion of the hour was Lothrop Stoddard looking hale and hearty after his recent trip abroad. As this is one of the first parties Mr. Stoddard has attended since his arrival he was greeted on all sides, and centered the spotlight as long as he stayed. With him was Mrs. Stoddard wearing a deep burgundy ensemble.

Mrs. Spruks Wears Fetching Bonnet

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Spruks were there, she sporting a fetching hat with a brief black brim and tall dusty pink crown. George Abell, recently returned from the West Indies with a coat of tan and a fund of fascinating stories, was among the guests, as were Mrs. Lee Murphy, Wolcott Waggaman, Miss Dorothy Tirrell, who came on from a small tea at the Czecho-Slovak Legation; the Commercial Counselor of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Boncesco, George Williams and Mrs. Robert Davis with her two daughters, Miss Dita Davis and Mrs. Paul Greenhalgh.

Republicans Guests at Teas And Dinners

Senator Barbour Is Host To Committeemen From New Jersey

In between meetings yesterday, the Republicans here for the meeting of the national committee found time to attend half a dozen teas, luncheons and dinners in their honor.

Senator and Mrs. Warren Barbour were among the hosts last evening, entertaining in honor of Mrs. Charles Conklin, Democratic National Committeewoman from New Jersey; Daniel Pomeroy, national committeeman from that State, and Mrs. Pomeroy.

Others included the Norwegian Minister, Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne, Senator John G. Townsend, of Delaware, Senator and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, Representative and Mrs. Clarence F. Hancock, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Brooke, Mr. and Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, Mrs. Sidney Lee, sister of the hostess, Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, and Mr. and Mrs. Warren Wheaton.

Hortons Give Tea At F Street Club

Saddlestring, Wyoming, entered the Washington social scene yesterday when Representative and Mrs. Frank O. Horton entertained for Republican luminaries at a tea at the 1925 F street Club, Mr. Horton is a member of the national committee.

Utah, Nevada, California, Wyoming, Oregon, Idaho, and several other States were represented at the party, as well as members of the House and Senate from the Western States. Mrs. Franklyn Waltman and Mrs. Robert McIlvaine assisted.

Another gay party yesterday was that given by Mr. and Mrs. John Marshall—Mr. Marshall was Assistant Attorney General in the Coolidge Administration. Theirs was held at the dignified Metropolitan Club and drew several hundred Republican Committee dignitaries as well as members of residential Washington society.

Guests of honor were D. L. Nugent—he's national committeeman from Alabama—and Mrs. Nugent, and William H. Armbrecht, another Alabama Republican.

Many Notables Among Those Present

The hostess wore a frock of pale blue crepe with a matching hat and a corsage of orchids, and Mrs. Nugent had chosen black with a smart white straw spring hat.

Seen here and there: Miss Robert Taft, in black with an orchid . . . Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin, being congratulated on the arrival of their newest grandson, who was born in Kentucky on Lincoln's Birthday, which the Senator seemed to find particularly symbolic . . . Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dewey—he is running for Representative from Illinois . . . Harold Mason, of Vermont, secretary of the Republican National Committee.

Mr. and Mrs. William MacCracken, local Republicans, were present, Mrs. MacCracken wearing a smart hat trimmed with a red bird; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tuckerman, and their daughter, Miss Ruth Tuckerman, who works for the Republican National Committee; Richard Sanger, of the committee; "Tie-less Tom" Toby, of South Carolina, who absolutely refuses to wear a necktie; Mrs. David Ingalls, whose husband was Assistant Secretary of the Navy in the Hoover Administration, and many other staunch Republicans.

Marsyl Stokes Wed at Cairo To Londoner Stationed There

Bride Is Daughter of Sylvanus Stokes, Of Annapolis, Niece of Snowden Fahnestock: Was Presented at Newport and London

A cable from England yesterday announced the wedding at Cairo, Egypt, of Miss Marsyl Stokes to Robert Montgomerie-Charrington, of London. The ceremony took place Thursday at All Saints Cathedral, climaxing a romance which began last autumn.

The bridegroom, who is the son of Mrs. Victor Montgomerie-Charrington, of London, and the late Mr. Montgomerie-Charrington, is in the English army and is stationed in Egypt. His pretty, dark-haired bride is the daughter of Sylvanus Stokes, of Annapolis, and Mrs. Henry Drummond-Wolff, of London. Her engagement was announced last month.

Interest in the marriage is widespread in the Capital, where the former Miss Stokes spent several seasons in the past few years. Her maternal grandmother, the late Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, was a leader in Capital society and her mother, the former Margaret Fahnestock, was a belle here in her debutante days and later a leader of the younger married set.

Mrs. Montgomerie-Charrington is a niece of Snowden Fahnestock, of Washington. She was presented to society in Newport at a large ball given by her grandmother and later made her debut in London.

Twentieth Century Club Marks Gallinger Therapy Room Opening

Underwood & Underwood

In the new library room of the children's ward of Gallinger Hospital are Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, director of the Bureau of Maternal and Child Welfare of the Department of Health, and Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, a past president of the Twentieth Century Club and member of the club's golden jubilee committee. Dr. George C. Ruhland, public health officer of the District, and Mrs. Edward G. Montgomery, president of the club, observe the work of William Sweet (aged 12), one of the patients at Gallinger who is making use of the occupational therapy equipment given by the club

Twentieth Century Club Gives Therapy Room to Gallinger

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor.

Sunshine streamed into a cheerful room in the children's ward of Gallinger Hospital, where visitors gathered yesterday afternoon. In the windows were flowering plants, goldfish bowls and vines, there was a glow in a broad fireplace and, around the room at looms, large and small, were boys and girls—both white and colored—making gay rugs and scarves.

The occasion was the housewarming of the occupational therapy room which has been equipped by the Twentieth Century Club as a gift to the hospital in observance of the club's fiftieth anniversary.

Mrs. Roosevelt was unable to attend as she had planned but club members and other guests were there to see the room and some of the young patients who will benefit by the exercise and training its equipment affords them. There was no question in the minds of anyone that the club had chosen well in selecting its anniversary project. The sight of earnest little faces and busy hands working with bright-colored weaving materials was as appealing as it was gratifying to the visitors. The children, glad to be at work, were responsive in explaining how they wove their patterns and in answering other questions asked by the callers.

Library Is Cozy Room for Children

The club president, Mrs. Edward G. Montgomery, and other officers, received on the first floor, opposite a little library room which the club also has furnished with cooperation of the public library.

With Mrs. Montgomery were Mrs. Benjamin Smith, who made the introductions; Mrs. Lawrence Martin, first vice president; Mrs. Francis Godwin, second vice president; Dr. Custis Hall, head of the physio-therapy department; Mrs. Hall, Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, director of the Bureau of Maternal and Child Welfare, and Dr. George Ruhland, District health officer. Mrs. Alfred Brooks was at the door.

The library was a cozy little room, with flowered cretonne at the windows and covering the cushions on wicker furniture. Long, low bookcases, just the height for children, extended along two walls and above them were pictures of story-book characters. There also was the book truck which the club had provided. It tilted forward and had shelves on which books could be displayed readily so young readers could look them over easily to make their selections.

Next Pressing Need Is an Elevator

Then there were small tables and chairs, made by manual training boys in colored schools as their contribution to the project. These were low and square, painted white and, in the center of each, was a little pottery vase with flowers. One of the vases was a funny little black and white lamb with spready ears and legs, with a spray of yellow mimosa blooming over his back.

Miss Louise Latimer, children's librarian for the public library, was there to greet the visitors. With Miss Clara Herbert of the club, she planned the library, selecting the books with utmost concern as to their suitability for the child readers in the hospital. Dr. George Bowerman, city librarian whose wife is a member of the club and who has taken great interest in the library room, also was present.

One of the interested visitors was Representative d'Alesandro, of Maryland, chairman of the District Committee. Another was Senator Capper, who was enthusiastic in his praise of the project. Among others were the chairman of the Social Security Board, Arthur Altmeyer, and Mrs. Altmeyer; Commissioner and Mrs. David McCoach, and Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor.

Representative Collins, who was among others invited, was unable to be present because of a cold.

Mr. Altmeyer, who was shown the room by Mrs. R. Thomas West, chairman of the committee which planned the Gallinger project, expressed hope that the next thing provided for the children's ward would be an elevator. This is greatly needed, Mrs. West explained, so that those who are unable to visit the room can be carried down to make use of it.

Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, of the Board of Education, who is golden jubilee chairman for the club, also was conducting guests through the rooms, as were other members of her committee and of the committee of which Mrs. West was chairman.

Mrs. Walter W. Husband, a past president of the club, was in charge of the tea, served in a large room adjacent to the therapy room. The table was set with a center arrangement of four tall white tapers and a bouquet of red and white tulips. Past presidents who alternated in serving were Mrs. Lyman B. Sworm-stedt, Mrs. Frederic E. Farrington, Mrs. Elwood Morey, Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, Mrs. U. G. B. Peirce, Mrs. Edward B. Clark, Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Karl Fenning.

Madame Chairman

—by Suzanne

MRS. AMOS A. FRIES, who is just out of Walter Reed Hospital after a six-week sojourn there, is losing no time getting into the swing of things again. As State chairman for the California room in Memorial Continental Hall of the D. A. R., her particular interest now is to locate an authentic colonial chair to be added to its furnishings.

She has $80 and possibly more, contributed by the California Daughters for purchase of a chair in memory of the real granddaughters, but where to find the chair?

The first requirement is that it be authentic and the second that it be a handsome piece, preferably an armchair. She found one before she went to the hospital which was authentic, but that was all there was to recommend it, she says. It was of the colonial period, without a doubt, but also one of the crudest and most unattractive chairs made at that time—so that is out and she's in the market for something better.

GOOD NEWS—Speaking of people just out of the hospital, another is Irene Vivian Wright, who returned to her home at the Roosevelt Hotel Thursday to complete her recuperation from an operation for appendicitis. And one of the items that promises to contribute to speedy recovery is the announcement of her name among those who have successfully passed the District Bar examination.

Irene was graduated with honors last spring from the National University Law School and is president of Alpha Lambda Chapter of Phi Delta Sorority as well as business manager of the magazine published by the international organization.

TEA FOR GRADUATES—Monday, at the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church, a tea will be given for the members of the Red Cross Home Hygiene class, who have completed a 17-week course.

SORORITY PLEDGES—Five Washington girls, students of the Woman's College at Duke University, have been pledged to sororities there. They are Helen Bingman, who pledged Phi Mu; Winifred Jones and Henrietta Bowne, pledged to Delta Delta Delta; Catherine Callender, Delta Gamma pledge, and Eleanor Terpley, who will join Pi Beta Pi.

PAST QUEENS MEET—The Past Honored Queens Club of Bethel 2, Order of Job's Daughters, will have a meeting Monday night at the home of Dorothy Vernon at Arlington. The honored queens of each Bethel are elected for terms of six months and, after they have done their bit at ruling the Bethels, they have a club of their own in addition to carrying on in the general activities of the order.

E. M. Waller Is Dead at 92; Burial Monday

Officially Reported Killed in Tennessee Action 78 Years Ago

Emmett M. Waller, who was officially reported killed in action at Murfreesboro, Tenn., in 1862, died yesterday of heart trouble and pneumonia at Walter Reed Hospital after having lived and worked until he was almost 93.

At the time of his death he still was on the pay roll of All Souls' Unitarian Church, Sixteenth and Harvard streets northwest, where funeral services will be at 11 a. m. Monday. He was treasurer and bookkeeper. Burial will be in the Confederate plot in Arlington National Cemetery.

Wounded in Leg

Born June 28, 1847, in Fayette County (Tennessee), Mr. Waller was only 13 when he joined the Confederate Army as a drummer boy. He was at Shiloh and at Murfreesboro, where a leg wound caused so great a loss of blood that he was reported dead. Some Federals observed that life flickered in him and sent him to a hospital as a prisoner.

Upon his recovery he was "let out to play marbles with the other children in the village," then was sent to his home in Memphis. Soon he joined Forrest's cavalry and fought the Union until the war ended.

Subsequently, he went West as a cowpuncher and trader, then joined the United States Army—his old foe—for a 33-year service record. When he retired he was a master sergeant. For a year after retirement he was a musician in the Belasco Theater here, then for 38 years worked for All Souls' Church.

As brigadier general of the District Brigade, Confederate Veterans Association, and commander of United Confederate Veterans Camp No. 171, he outlived all but two of the 282 Confederates who lived in the District when he came here in 1902. The two are Cornelius B. Hite, 295 Connecticut avenue northwest, and Peter Pierre Smith, 4830 Sixteenth street northwest.

Mr. Waller lived at 2804 Fourteenth street northwest with a son, Lynch D. Waller, attorney. He leaves two other sons, Emmett D. Waller, 606 G street southeast, and Harry W. Waller, New York City.

Super-Road Asked To Link D. C., Boston

Congress yesterday was asked to provide funds for a superhighway between Washington and Boston in a resolution adopted by the North Atlantic States Association of Highway Officials, meeting in Atlantic City.

The proposed highway, subject of recent discussions in New York by State and Federal officials, would be a 12-lane speedway, elevated in urban areas, free from traffic lights and barred to heavy commercial traffic. It would link Washington with Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Boston.

In calling upon Congress to provide the superroad, Maj. E. R. Whitman, chairman of the Maryland Roads Commission, sponsor of the resolution, expressed belief Federal funds should be used because the eight populous States to be served by the highway "pay 50 per cent of Federal taxes."

He pointed out that President Roosevelt and Secretary of War Woodring have already indorsed the project.

Liquor Inquiry To Hear Views Of Welliver

Former Attorney Of Beverage Board Agrees to Testify

Edward M. Welliver, former will make definite recommendations counsel of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, yesterday conferred with the special House subcommittee investigating local liquor sales and agreed to testify when open hearings start next week, probably Tuesday morning.

It is understood that Welliver will make definite recommendations for changes in the liquor regulations and the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act.

The subcommittee also listened to complaints of two attorneys, Ethelbert Frey and Charles E. Morganston, but had no comment to make on their testimony.

Meanwhile, members of the ABC Board indicated they would resist any move to place the operation of Washington liquor stores under a Government dispensary system and would oppose an earlier closing hour of package stores.

While withholding comment until called upon for their opinions, members of the board began gathering data to support arguments that the District would lose money by going into the liquor business.

Mrs. Agnes K. Mason, vice chairman of the ABC Board, conferred at length with Corporation Counsel Seal in what was understood to have been a review of recent decisions of the board.

Chairman Eberharter, of the House subcommittee conducting the investigation, said that the group had completed its first phase of the inquiry and probably would hold no more executive examination of witnesses.

8 Identify N. C. Fugitive As Bandit Here

Escaped Convict Is 'Beady-Eye' Robber, Woman Victims Say

David Joseph Martin, colored, 25-year-old escaped convict from Raleigh, N. C., was held by police last night, identified by Mrs. Robert Brennan, wife of the Irish Minister, and seven other women as the "beady-eyed" bandit. Pocketbooks of two of the women were found in his room.

Martin was picked from impromptu lineups at the Thirteenth Precinct Station yesterday and Thursday night by his victims.

Mrs. Brennan, who was threatened with a blackjack by a light-skinned colored man January 31, did not hesitate in her identification yesterday. One of her husband's coats was taken by the bandit.

Miss Stella DeBarr, of 1954 Columbia road northwest, identified Martin through a scar on his lip, remains of scratches she inflicted when the man entered her apartment, also January 31.

"Let me see him, I left my mark on him," Miss DeBarr demanded at police headquarters yesterday. She approached the suspect and pointed out the scar on his lip.

Others who pointed out the man were Rose Hopkins, maid for former Senator David Reed, of Pennsylvania, who was cut on the face at the Reed home, 2222 S street northwest, February 8; Miss Charlotte Bowman and Mrs. John Guernsey, both of 1020 Nineteenth street northwest, attacked January 23; Mrs. Margaret Dorsey, daughter of Representative Joseph J. Mansfield (Democrat), of Texas, at 2101 New Hampshire avenue northwest, January 30; Miss Beatrice Frankle, 2123 Eighteenth street northwest, January 31; Miss Margaret Mizner, 1616 Sixteenth street northwest, and Miss Ruth Schendel, of 1901 Sixteenth street northwest.

Martin was captured Thursday night when he attempted to snatch Miss Schendel's purse as she was entering her apartment. She clung to the bag and screamed for help. David James and Herbert Wesson, both residents of the building, and the janitor, Hilliard Mitchell, colored, 25, held the suspect until police arrived.

Department of Justice records yesterday disclosed that Martin's fingerprints are the same as those of a colored convict who escaped from a Raleigh prison, January 19, 1939. Convicted on a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon, he was sentenced to serve a year. The sentence was increased to four and a half, records disclosed, after two previous escape attempts.

Martin told police yesterday he had been in Washington about 13 months. He gave his address as the first block of Florida avenue northwest. The pocketbooks of Mrs. Dorsey and Miss Hopkins were found in his room, detectives said.

Missing Veteran Is Amnesia Victim

SHEEHAN

According to his sister, Miss Catherine Sheehan, the missing man had left home the morning of January 26 with the remark, "I'll be home for supper." Sheehan was associated with the National Tribune, a veterans' publication, as associate editor. Colleagues said that Sheehan had gone to lunch at noon and that was the last seen of him.

He is a member of the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars. His mother, Mrs. Ellen Sheehan, 80, is seriously ill.

Capital's 'Hotel for Sick' Gets Its Finishing Touches

Doctors' Hospital, Under Construction More Than a Year, to Have 250 Beds; Staff Is Expected to Number 300

Washington's $1,600,000 Doctors' Hospital, scheduled to open in two weeks, yesterday was getting finishing touches, from the depths of its filled basement to its tenth-floor solarium.

Under construction since January 9, 1939, the new hospital needs only a few more dabs of paint, several fixtures, some heavy furniture moving and a lot of dusting to make it ready for occupancy.

The opening, said officials yesterday, will be informal. Weekend after next doctors and the public will be admitted for inspection and the tentative "open for business" date is March 4.

The hospital occupies the north middle half of the 1800 block of I street northwest and links together the Washington Medical Building at 1801 I street and the Columbian Medical Building at 1835 I street. Corridors connect the three buildings at ground and basement levels.

"Hotel For the Sick"

Doctors' Hospital, according to its administrator, Charles A. Vadakin, will be a "hotel for the sick." It is planned for private patients, is expected to be self-supporting, and officials hope to reduce hospital atmosphere to a minimum.

Beds will be furnished with foam rubber mattresses and pillows. Wooden furniture, of French provincial design, will be used throughout and every room for patients will have Venetian blinds and gaily colored drapes. Color, said Vadakin, is a definite psychological help toward getting well.

Special measures have been taken to eliminate the ancient complaint about nurses who fail to answer patients' calls. Instead of a bell system, patients will have two-way communication with the central office for the floor. A secretary or floor administrator will be on duty on each floor to receive calls from patients, route directions to nurses and receive guests.

In the basement are the main kitchen, a food preparation machine equipped o turn out 2,000 meals a day, with the help of a French chef, and a staff of 15, a special diet kitchen and a power laundry. The main floor houses the lobby, including reception desk, flower shop and prescription drug store, emergency room and offices.

Staff to Number 300

The next nine floors provide space for the hospital's 250 beds, 10 operating rooms, four delivery rooms and nurseries for 65 babies. Topping the structure is a solarium with two rock gardens and a promenade.

Vadakin said nearly 300 persons would man the hospital and that nearly 750 doctors had applied for appointment to the medical staff. The hospital will operate no nurses' training program and all nurses employed will be graduates. Vadakin said 95 per cent of the personnel will be Washingtonians.

Plans for the hospital had been under discussion for nearly 15 years before ground was broken. It is built on the site of the old Sidwell Friends School, where President Theodore Roosevelt once made commencement addresses. Its directors are Dr. Charles S. White, president; Dr. Edward L. Morrison, vice president; Dr. Charles W. Hyde, treasurer; Dr. Oscar B. Hunter, secretary; Dr. Alan Chenery, Dr. Richard K. Thompson, Dr. James Alexander Lyon, Dr. Fred A. Moss, Dr. R. Lyman Sexton and Dr. William H. Sprigg.

To Move Here, Greek Church Leader Admits

U. S. Archbishop Arrives to Greet Envoy From Athens

His Grace, Archbishop Spyrou Athenagoras, head of the Greek Orthodox Church in the Americas, yesterday confirmed the report that the Archdiocesan headquarters will be moved from New York City to Washington.

Coming here to pay his respects to the new Greek Minister, M. Cimon Diamantopoulos, he explained to local Greek religious and civic leaders that, while the exact time of the transfer would depend on the outcome of present unsettled world conditions, the Archdiocesan seat will be located here in the future.

Desire for a more central location, with proximity to diplomatic and official headquarters, were given as principal reasons for the proposed change by the Archbishop, who expects to come here in the near future to select a site for a Cathedral for the Archdiocese.

Garbed in his black "Kalimafki" —high-crowned headdress, flowing black robes, and a gold "rasa" draped upon his chest, he visited the Greek Legation during the late afternoon, and last night dined at the Mayflower Hotel with a small party of friends.

He explained that he had returned to New York City from a Florida trip on February 5—just a day too late to greet the new Minister.

When he left he remarked that he would be back again next year to make her 100th birthday picture. Mrs. Hull said she wasn't so sure he would. Well, here it is! It would have been too hard to blow out 100 candles, and it was the nineteenth birthday of her great grandson, Frederick R. Rice, jr., so they put that many on the cake. The photographer hopes to go back again next year.

Central Trims Wilson; Western Five Victor

The Washington Post Sports

18 WASHINGTON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1940 X*

Blue Comes From Behind To Win, 25-21

Indians Trounced By Red Raiders; Di Blasi Stars For Central

The scrappy gang of basketers from Central who dropped their first two interhigh games this year took another step upward in the standings last night at Tech, coming from behind in the last quarter to trim Woodrow Wilson, 25-21.

In the nightcap of the regular Friday doubleheader, Western jumped into a 3-0 lead in the first period and walked away from Anacostia, 40-26.

As a result of the twin session, the first four positions in the standings—the holders of which will participate in the championship round robin tourney next week—were in the hands of Roosevelt, Wilson, Central and Western, in that order.

Two Clubs Through

Roosevelt and Western have completed their seasons. Central and Tech and Wilson and Eastern will tangle Tuesday in games which will decide which must take part in a play-off—if a playoff is necessary.

In contrast to its zany defeat of Eastern and its 1-point margin over Anacostia, Central looked downright spectacular last night. It stayed in contention throughout the game, went behind at 20-13 midway of the third period, and came with a rush as it shut out Wilson's frantic five in the last quarter.

After the first session the Mount Pleasanters were out front, 7-5, and they had stretched that to 13-9 at intermission. Then Wilson, whose play caused Coach Tony Kupka to throw up his hands in dispair after the game, staged its only respectable rally of the game.

Score Tied Quickly

Jordan Bentley and Bart Fugler, with three lightning-like thrusts, tied the count at 15-15 early in the third quarter and Moke MacDonald single-handedly gave the Presidents a 20-15 margin with five straight points. Points by Charley Kligman, Teddy Thomaides and Zello Lagos cut that lead, however, and Central's deficit was only 21-20 at the gong.

When Sam Di Blasi, Thomaides and Benny Steiner registered points in the last session to give Central its final 25-21 margin, Wilson lost all semblance of a basketball team. It went wild, and the winners calmly froze the ball for the last three minutes.

Steiner Improving

Di Blasi's eight points stood out in the evenly divided scoring, but the improved backboard game of Steiner was the real feature. MacDonald also turned in eight points in the Presidents futile effort.

On the long end of 7-5 and 16-8 margins at the first two quarters, Western turned its third triumph into a farce before the end of the third period. Going into the final session Western was out in front, 35-19, and from there in players fouled each other for the joy of it, ran with the ball, shot from im-

Dunkelberger Upset in Golf Tourney

By the United Press

St. Augustine, Fla., Feb. 16.—Mel Demarais, 22-year-old star from Boston, Mass., and Bobby Walker, Jacksonville, Fla., entrant, meet tomorrow in the 36-hole finals of the national championship of golf club champions.

Both finalists turned in upset victories today.

Demarais won his semifinal match from Defending Champion Bobby Dunkelberger, High Point, N. C., 5 and 4. Demarais was 5 up on Dunkelberger at the end of the morning 18 holes.

Walker won over Bill Stark, also of Jacksonville, 3 and 2. Walker had a 1-up advantage over Stark at the end of the first 18.

High spot of the day was the eleventh hole of the afternoon round in the Dunkelberger-Demarais match when both contestants got birdie 3s without putting. Dunkelberger chipped into the cup from 70 feet away. Demarais then looped a niblick shot out of a trap dead into the cup.

River Vale Protests Early Scores; Tight Defense Holds Foes Until 3d Period

The Washington Eagles continued their belated drive toward an Eastern Amateur League hockey title last night by rallying behind the sensational goal tending of Freshman Lester Colvin to swamp River Vale, 8-2, at Riverside Stadium.

One of the largest crowds of the season, more than 2,600 fans, saw the rejuvenated Eagles record their fourth successive victory to gain two points on the idle Baltimore Orioles. The New York Rovers, meantime, regained the league lead from the Orioles by defeating the Sea Gulls in Atlantic City. Washington trails the Rovers by seven points and the Orioles by six.

The Eagles meet the Skeeters in River Vale tonight and then swing over to New York to play the Rovers at Madison Square Garden tomorrow afternoon. Both are crucial games for if Washington manages to win them it will definitely be back in the race.

The eight goals last night against the outclassed Golfers constituted a tied record for the Eagles whose previous high points for one game was eight scored against the same River Vale team.

Johnny McLeer, Washington defense, also set some sort of mark by playing 55 minutes of a possible 60.

Goalie Colvin, whose surprisingly fine work has featured the current Washington drive, had a 7-to-0 shutout going into the final period.

Score on Colvin

Colvin lost his bid, for what would have been the second shutout of the season for a Washington goalie, in the opening seconds of the third session, when Center Bill McGregor poked one through him from close by. The Eagles have won five of the seven matches in which Colvin has played.

The Skeeters' second point was credited to 31-year-old Jack McKinnon, newly acquired center, who was supposed to have joined the Eagles at the beginning of the season.

McKinnon, incidentally, proves one of the best crowd-baiters to appear, being showered with boos for his constant "beefing" to the referee.

The match was the cleanest of the season, the one and only foul called being a major one against, of all persons, Len Burrage, peaceful Eagles' defense, in the third period.

Centers Aid Eagles

Play in the opening period was 90 per cent in the territory of the golfers who seemingly could not carry the puck beyond the center zone in the face of relentless poke-checking by Ramsay and Pastes who were alternating at center for Washington.

Ramsay, especially, was troublesome to the visitors, skating like a demon from one corner to another, retrieving shots missed by his mates and stealing the puck on the rare occasions when River Vale got possession of it.

The first two Washington goals evoked long and loud protest from River Vale. The first, scored at 1:23 by Germann from Ramsay, barely bounced in off the pads of Goalie Hemming and the Golfers protested that Hemming had made a save.

Then at 8:23 after McKillop had poked in the Eagles' second point on a double pass from Dewey and

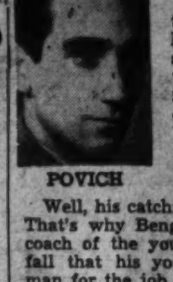
This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 16.—His hair has retreated on all fronts but his baldness isn't recent. Probably the most famous thing about Bennie Bengough when he was a member of the pennant-winning Yankees a dozen years ago was his shiny pate which unfailingly caused a titter in the grandstands when he doffed his mask and cap to chase a pop foul behind the plate.



POVICH

He wasn't one of the great ball players on those great Yankee teams of 1926-27-28, but he was the best catcher they had and with such as Gehrig, Meusel, Lazzeri and Combs to do the hitting Bengough's batting didn't matter much. He was clever enough to hold down the regular catching job with the Yankees for four years and he might have achieved some individual fame save for the fact that he was always in the shadow of his illustrious team mates.

Well, his catching skill didn't escape Clark Griffith, at least. That's why Bengough is now in the Nats' training camp as coach of the young batterymen. When Griffith decided last fall that his young catchers needed tutoring he knew the man for the job. Bengough was his choice and he gladly exchanged his coaching job at Newark for a post with the Nats.

"I felt sort of nice about that offer," Bengough was saying today. "Mr. Griffith is no green pea in this baseball business and when he offered me a job I considered it a compliment. The same offer from another club owner wouldn't have been so flattering. Mr. Griffith and Connie Mack are the only club owners in the league who know anything about the niceties of catching."

The baseball fates which have conspired to throw Bengough into the company of Bucky Harris in the Nats' camp have brought them together as clubmates again after a 21-year lapse. Back in 1919 they were the bright young catcher and second baseman of the Buffalo Club of the International League and tabbed as sure-fire major league prospects.

To the everlasting regret of the late John McGraw he was hasty in his judgment of Bengough and Harris on a September day in 1919 when Manager George Wiltse of Buffalo sent the pair to the Polo Grounds for a tryout with the Giants.

"We went together, Harris and I," related Bengough, "and for a time we couldn't even get in the park. The gatemen didn't believe us when we told them we were reporting to McGraw for a tryout. We were a half hour outside the gates before they believed our story. The tryout was a joke."

"McGraw laid down some bunts for me to see what I could do about throwing to first and he had my tongue hanging out. His bunts were going out to the pitcher's box. Harris had about five minutes practice at second base. Neither of us got a chance to bat. McGraw was frank enough. He told Harris 'you're too small.' He was kinder to me. He said 'Tell Wiltse I told you to come back in a couple of years.'"

Harris beat Bengough into the big leagues by three years but in 1923, Manager Miller Huggins thought enough of Bennie to give the Buffalo club $20,000 and four ball players for the little catcher. Wally Schang was slowing up and Huggins scented the need of another catcher for his Yankees.

"I'll always believe I got a break with the Yankees because Huggins, like myself, was a little man," Bengough recited. "McGraw wanted big fellows but Huggins wasn't prejudiced that way."

June 1, 1925, is now somewhat notable as a baseball date. On that afternoon Lou Gehrig broke into the Yankee line-up as a regular to start the consecutive game streak that carried for nearly 15 seasons. But another fellow broke into the Yankee line-up that same day. The only person who probably remembers it, however, is Gengough himself.

"Huggins was getting disgusted with the Yankees about that time. They had lost three in a row or something and he benched a half dozen regulars. He took Wally Pipp off first and started Gehrig for the first time. He benched Everett Scott and sent Peewee Wanninger to shortstop. He gave me Schang's job behind the plate and he sent young George Pipgras in to pitch."

"I'll never forget the way Hug took Gehrig aside that day and told him how to hit," continued Bengough. "He told Gehrig 'you're a sap for trying to pull the ball into rightfield all the time. With your power you can hit to left and center. Any way, we've got a home run hitter on this team. Don't try to be another Ruth. Just meet the ball."

"It didn't take Gehrig long to learn how to stroke the ball to all fields. I was Lou's roommate for a couple of years and it was no wonder to me that he became a great ball player. He was the first guy on the field and the last one off it. At the start, he was a joke around the bags. He used to spike himself honest. But he wasn't a shoemaker for long.

When, in 1929, a tall young fellow came along to take Bengough's job as the Yankees' catcher it certainly was no disgrace to Bennie because the young fellow was Bill Dickey. And to Bengough Dickey has been a standout among catchers.

"There was a self-made baseball star," said Bengough. "I remember Bill when he joined us. He was greener than a shamrock. He couldn't throw a ball to a base unless it was pitched outside to him. But he caught on. He never hit .300 in any minor league, but he started immediately to be a .300 hitter for the Yankees. He simply made himself a great ball player."

One more question, Bennie. How about that great Yankee team of 1927, what would it do against the Yankees of 1939?

Bengough's answer to that one was eloquent enough. "Well," he said, "our 1927 Yankee team won the pennant by 16 games. And it was a stronger league back there in those days. As far as comparing the 1939 and 1927 Yankees is concerned, what do you think I think"?

Wire Service Is Refused Turf Sheets

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Feb. 16.—The Government claimed a new victory today in a drive to halt transmission over interstate wires of race track information to bookmakers.

United States District Attorney William J. Campbell announced that "the first big substitute" for Nation-wide News Service, Inc., had been "smashed" when the Western Union Telegraph Co. agreed to stop service to race "scratch sheets" effective with the close of business today.

Nation-wide News Service, information agency of M. L. Annenberg, Philadelphia publisher, quit business last fall during the Government's campaign. Annenberg and a number of other persons are under Federal indictment here on charges of furthering a lottery by supplying race information to bookmakers.

In New York, J. C. Willever, first vice president of the Western Union, confirmed Campbell's announcement with the reservation that "in some places we have been restrained by court order from stopping such service." He mentioned Kansas City and Baltimore, Md.

Campbell's announcement said the Western Union had agreed to its stop order after receiving a warning of possible prosecution. The prosecutor said that an inquiry had disclosed that some of Annenberg's former employes were carrying on new operations.

No FCC Action Taken, Says Official

An official said here yesterday the Federal Communications Commission had taken no action to force the Western Union to discontinue service to race "scratch sheets."

Told of reports that such service would be discontinued at midnight, he commented:

Howard Sports Daily Demands Service

Baltimore, Feb. 16 (AP).—The Howard Sports Daily, Inc., asked the public service commission today to order the Western Union Telegraph Co. to continue furnishing it service, which the company said would be discontinued after today.

The corporation said it was a collector and distributor of news "involving events of all character, including sporting news," and the publisher of "what is commonly known as a 'Scratch Sheet.'"

Harris Sees Nats' Rookies, Wags Head

Manager Silent After First Drill; Bengough to Teach Evans and Early Fine Points of Catching Job

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 16.—Stanley Raymond Harris scanned the scene which presented 15 athletes in Washington uniforms unlimbering today in the first practice of the training season and had little comment to make.

But it was not difficult to read his thoughts . . . Bucky Jacobs has picked up some weight . . . That's nice, he can use it . . . So that big, tall string bean is Sid Hudson . . . Well, if his pitching is half as handsome as his face, he'll be a help . . . Jimmy Wasdell hasn't any protruding tummy this year and maybe he'll make a first baseman after all. . . . Those chops on Joe Krakauskas will have to be worked off. . . . That Almon Williams is bigger than I thought, but not too big. . . . If we can get some meat on that young Masterson it won't hurt him. . . . And we'll order a rubber shirt for this Paul Gerhman. . . . He's a butter ball. . . . I can tell from here that some of these guys are really green peas. . . . Ah, me, it looks like a long season.

Boys Held in Check

The Nats' manager could gleam little more than insight into the figures and personalities of his rookie crop in the opening workout. The athletes had little opportunity to display any talents they might have, what with Harris and Owner Griffith cautioning them against any vigorous work and the photographers having free run of the field.

The chief development of the practice was the consignment of Rookie Catchers Jake Early and Al Evans to the keeping of Coach Bennie Bengough by Manager Harris.

In a brief order to his two catchers, Harris said: "Until further notice, Bengough is your immediate boss. You're responsible to him."

The former Yankee catcher who has joined the Washington club as coach immediately took Early and Evans into hand. Bengough was enthusiastic at the finish of the workout: "I don't know how they can hit, or what they act like behind the bat," he told Harris, "but you don't see throwing arms like theirs on any but the best catchers. It's going to be a pleasure to work with that pair."

Bengough wasn't telling Harris anything the latter didn't know about the throwing skill of Eearly and Evans. "We've known about their arms for a long time, Bennie," smiled Harris. "It's up to you to make catchers out of them. They have a lot to learn."

If Harris showed a special interest in his rookie crop, it was directed toward a trio of pitchers—Almon Williams, Paul Gehrman and Sid Hudson. Williams and Gehrman represent the only pitching

The only familiar face in the lot, and easily recognizable because of his 6 feet 3 inches, was the giant Roberto Ortiz, back again in the Washington camp after a short-lived period of sensationalism last year.

The other Cubans fetched here by the intrepid Cambria are George Torres, an outfielder; Arthur Castro, a pitcher, and Louis Minsel, a third

Senator Reynolds Renews Fight For Legalized Racing in D. C.

Senator Robert R. Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, is renewing his efforts to give Washington a race track. The Senator, who waged a long fight for a District turf plant in the Senate in 1937 and who introduced a racing bill in 1938, said yesterday he had directed a written request to Senator William B. King, chairman of the District Committee. He asked that he be provided a hearing by the full committee on his present bill which would legalize racing in the District.

The Senator said that his racing bill, with pari mutuel features, had heretofore been reported favorably by the full District Committee and that the bill on two different occasions has been passed by the House.

He stated that he was anxious for a hearing by the full committee rather than a subcommittee so that the entire matter might be thrashed out without delay, and that he was anxious that all proponents and opponents of the bill be heard in public.

"There are tracks of this nature in Maryland just across the District line," said Senator Reynolds. "I see no reason whatsoever why there should be prevented the operation of a track within the District of Columbia, so that the District and its property owners might benefit as a result of the revenue. Since Maryland tracks are deriving revenue from the District, this revenue should be provided for the District rather than the State of Maryland.

Options have been held by various persons on the Benning Track, now used as a training oval, which was the last scene of legalized racing here early in the century.

Labrot Yacht Is Declared Race Winner

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Feb. 16.—Stormy Weather, the trim yacht captained by William Labrot, of Annapolis, Md., was officially declared winner of the Miami-Nassau ocean race today after being awarded the victory once and then yielding first place to the scratch boat Tioga on the basis of corrected time handicaps.

Robert E. Collins, commodore of the Miami Yacht Club and statistician for the race, said final computations showed Stormy Weather scored her fourth successive victory in the 184-mile classic.

Tioga placed second in the official list and Wakiva was third.

Race committeemen in Nassau earlier had said errors were made in giving first place to Stormy Weather and that corrections showed Tioga's record-breaking run of 19 hours 36½ minutes entitled the 72-foot scratch boat, owned by Harry E. Noyes, of Marblehead, Mass., to first place.

On a second revision of figures, however, Collins said that the errors were "lamentable" but that Stormy Weather officially had been decided as the winner, with a time of 18 hours 39 minutes 32 seconds.

Tioga was ranged second with a time of 18 hours 42 minutes 23 seconds, and Wakiva, 70-foot yawl, owned by Harkness Edwards, of Lexington, Ky., was rated third with 18 hours 59 minutes 50 seconds.

Cavalier Ring Team May Lose 5 Regulars

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlottesville, Feb. 16.—Mounting injuries and minor ailments of one kind or another may remove five regulars from the University of Virginia boxing lineup for tomorrow night's meet here with Penn State, which will get under way at 7:30 before an expected capacity crowd of 5,000.

Replacements are already named for Dick Williams, veteran 145-pounder; Fenton Somerville, junior letterman at 165 pounds, and Ed Burgers, who took over the heavyweight role for the first time this year. The sudden outbreak of casualties may extend to Arthur LipKint, 127 pounds, and Peter Coy, 135 pounds, both sophomore regulars.

Ready for action, however, are Joe Block, 120 pounds; Capt. Truman Southall, 155 pounds, and Kenneth Rathbun, 175 pounds, all undefeated in four previous meets.

John Carruth, freshman boxer two years ago, will move into the 145-pound vacancy for the first varsity bout, and Peter Berkey, a promising freshman middleweight of last year, will substitute for Somerville. Charles Harper, whose experience is limited to freshman competition two seasons ago, is the heavyweight selection.

Lineup for Lions

No successors have been designated for LipKint and Coy, whose disabilities are of a minor nature but enough to make them uncertainties.

The lineup for the Nittany Lions, holders of two dual meet victories and a tie, probably will read George Hankins, 120 pounds; Capt. Michael Cooper, 127 pounds; Frank Stanko, 135 pounds; Robert Baird, 145 pounds; Bernard Sandson, 155 pounds; Jim Lewis, 165 pounds; Paul Mall or Harry Masters, 175 pounds, and John Patrick, heavyweight.

Those undefeated in dual competition this season are Stanko, Baird, Sandson and Lewis, while Cooper and Patrick have lost only one each. Five of the Penn State boxers figured in the Virginia meet of last year, which the Lions won by a 4½-to-3½ score, while Southall, who decisioned Sanson, is the lone Virginian veteran of that engagement.

Western Open Golf Postponed

By the Associated Press

Houston, Tex., Feb. 16.—A cloudburst, converting the River Oaks Country Club fairways into rivers this morning, forced postponement of the starting of the Western Open golf tournament until Saturday.

Only one threesome of the bulky field was able to get around the layout. Their scores were thrown out and the field will make a fresh start Saturday, with 18 holes Sunday, and the final 36-hole round Monday.

Finishing the tour of the par 35, 36—71 layout were Lawrence Juelg, Beeville, Tex.; Gray Little, Lake Charles, La., and Everett Comstock, Yankton, S. Dak. Comstock was low with 78, Little had 79, and Juelg had an 85.

In the pro-amateur competition yesterday, Byron Nelson, Western Open champion, stripped two strokes from a par made doubly elusive by cold north winds.

Maryland U. Ringmen Battle W. Md.; C. U. Meets Lockhaven

Matches Last For Terps, Cardinals

Cage Game Also Feature of Md. Program Tonight; Terps Favored

By Jack Munhall.

"All-University Night," the University of Maryland's own version of "Helzapoppin," will pack a capacity crowd into Ritchie Coliseum tonight as the local winter college sports program reaches its waning stages with a pair of boxing meets and a basketball game.

The Maryland mittmen meet Western Maryland about 10 o'clock in the feature of the four-hour program at College Park and in the other match Catholic University plays host to Lock-Haven State Teachers at 8:30 o'clock. The engagements are the last for the two local teams, though the Terps will defend their conference title next month.

The basketball game brings together Maryland and Catholic University in the opener of the College Park conglomeration which will be continued with 13 colorful depictions of extra-curricular and intra-mural activities in which several hundred students will participate. Those planning to attend these events are urged to be in their seats promptly at 7:30 o'clock for the doors of Ritchie Coliseum will be locked at that time and not reopened until just before the boxing.

Terps Heavy Favorites

Maryland will be heavily favored in both athletic contests, for the opposition is not expected to be strenuous. The boxers, despite the absence of a pair of regulars, 127-pound Bob Bradley and 155-pound Norman Hathaway, are rated considerably stronger than Western Maryland's squad which recently took an 8-0 pasting from Army. On the court George DeWitt & Co. figure to deal C. U. its eleventh loss in 12 games, although the Cardinals have a penchant for coming up with an inspired performance against Maryland fives.

Bobby Dorr will supplant Bradley in the Maryland boxing lineup and Izzy Alperstein will step up from the 145-pound class to replace Hathaway, with Buck Lanza taking over his berth.

Three of C. U.'s greatest boxers of all time—Joe Bunsa, Fred Stant and Jay Turner—will finish their college careers as the Clouting Cardinals bid for their fifth straight victory. An added incentive for the trio to flash their best ability tonight is the uncertainty as to which is to receive the Meyer trophy, awarded annually to the most valuable member of the team. All three are undefeated.

With Gerry Strang, 165-pound star out of the line-up because of rib injuries, C. U. will start a revised team, dropping Stant and Turner down a class and inserting Julius Stanges into the heavyweight slot. It had been hoped that Strang would be able to fight, but examination yesterday by Dr. M. P. DeVito, team physician, revealed his first and second ribs to be separated.

Twins on Card Lock-Haven is somewhat of an unknown quantity, a team composed of three veterans and five inexperienced battlers. Outstanding star of the invaders is 127-pound Billy Bressler, who holds a decision over Datner Kaufman, of C. C. N. Y., present Eastern Intercollegiate champion at the weight. Bressler's twin brother, George, will fight in the 120-pound class. Billy's opponent will be Lenny Bartone and George's will be Ted Mandris.

A third feature bout is expected to develop between Bunsa and Jimmy Hopkins in the 145-pound class. Bunsa will be striving to maintain his record of never having lost a bout at Brookland.

Western Maryland's main hopes for an upset victory over Maryland are vested in Capt. Joe Rouse, 120 pounds; Harry Ricker, 135, and Mike Petrucci, heavyweight.

Eastern Five Wins, 27 to 22, Over St. John's

Tide Registers 11th Victory of Season; Losers' 11th Setback

St. John's Claret cagers lost their second decision of the season to Eastern yesterday on the latter's floor, 27-22, but the loss was a 3-point improvement over the outcome of the earlier game. The first clash ended in a 34-26 margin for the Tide.

While absorbing its eleventh setback this year and allowing Eastern its eleventh triumph, St. John's had every chance to win until the last play of the third period. With the count 18-16 against them, however, the Johnnies lost their touch completely and saw Eastern run up a 25-17 lead that clinched the game. Baskets by Herbie Munhall and Frank Cady, and a foul shot by Cady in the waning seconds, only cut the Tide advantage slightly.

The first two sessions were strictly a scoring duel between the Claret's Joe Corrado and Eastern's Bob Custer. They came out exactly even with 10 points each, though Custer won scoring honors of the game when he registered a neat tap shot midway of the final period to make his total 12 points. Corrado, under the watchful eye of Moe Shulman, went scoreless in the last two quarters.

It was Custer who gave Eastern a 6-4 lead after the first 8 minutes. Late in the next period, when the Johnnies boasted a 14-10 margin, Custer combined with Neil Craig for three snappy goals that put the Tide out front for the half, 16-14. Only 6 points went on the scoreboard in the third session, Eastern getting the odd 2-pointer that seemed to stop its foe.

Friends Five Trounces St. James, 37-16

Corson Jones Paces Host Club; Visitors Score Only 3 Goals

Paced by the fine set-shooting of young Corson Jones, Friends School easily disposed of St. James School, of Hagerstown, Md., 37-16, yesterday on the Friends floor.

After the first quarter, which ended 5-1 in favor of Friends, the host team scored at will against the inexperienced invaders, compiling a 17-7 lead at the end of the first half.

Jones had a partner in scoring, however, in Armand Newmyer, lanky forward, who scored nine points and contributed a polished floor game to his team's victory.

How effective was Friends' zone defense may be ascertained from the fact that St. James was able to score only three goals from the floor during the entire game. However, Friends' nefarious play more than once drew the wrath of Referee Shirley and as a result St. James was able to cash in on ten free throws.

With CONSIDINE

CONSIDINE

New York, Feb. 16.—The four principals in one of the most remarkable mile races in track history meet again tomorrow night at Madison Square Garden in the twenty-ninth running of the Baxter mile. They are the new, but still uncrowned champ, Chuck Fenske; Glenn Cunningham, Gene Venzke and Looie Zamperini. A few weeks ago in the Wanamaker mile they turned in a furiously competitive performance which saw Fenske win in 4:07.4, with the other gents freckling his neck with their hot breaths—their times being 4:07.7, 4:08.2 and 4:08.2.

Fenske, whom we recall as the quiet bespectacled youth we impatiently pushed away one day in order to interview the now rundown Archie San Romani, broke old man Cunningham's Wanamaker record with that 4:07.4. The Wisconsin boy has been making a habit of breaking the old boy's marks. His 4:10.3 on January 27 at Boston smashed Glenn's K. of C. record.

Cunningham said at the start of the year that this would be his final year in the business; that he planned to taper off slowly, to reduce the size of his heart and lungs as a safeguard against future troubles with those organs. Essentially, he was going to jog out of the spotlight like a runner who, after he breaks the tape, keeps going easier and easier until he nullifies the chances of hurting his legs with a quick stop.

But the fact is that Glenn, either from the momentum of ten great years of running, or from a combination of pride and the promptings of a courageous heart, has been running himself bowlegged this season. He is being beaten not because he is tapering off, but because Fenske is the thing none of us ever expected to see—a better runner.

You can be pretty sure the old gent from Kansas will be in here pitching tomorrow night. He, of course, holds the records for the race. It is 4:08.6, made two years ago when Venzke gave him a heluva chase. So much confidence has the foot-racing public invested in Fenske that it believes that Fenske will knock that one over tomorrow night, too, further to erase the Cunningham marks and bleach the Cunningham fame which only a few weeks ago seemed so indelible.

Some of the experts even think that Cunningham's most amazing mark—his semiofficial world mark of 4:04.4, made on Dartmouth's indoor track—is in jeopardy tomorrow night. We doubt it, although Fenske seems to be the fellow who will break it eventually.

Zamperini must be classed as the dark horse of the race. The Californian, who holds the collegiate title, has not yet mastered the indoor game. This is his first season at it, and already he has done 4:08.2. He may be just on the way up. But then, we suppose, so is Fenske. We're betting him on the nose, but somehow we'd like to see the old man rear on his haunches tomorrow night and bust that tape—just to teach the young bucks not to tamper further with an edifice it took him years to erect.

Capt. Butler Stars As Mates Overcome Lead to Take Game

Dominated by Forward Capt. Butler, the Fairfax High School basketers overcame a lead which St. Albans held for three periods, to eke out a 24-22 victory yesterday in the latter's gym.

Butler accounted for 10 of his team's 11 field goals, scoring 2 in the second quarter, 4 in the final quarter, the last goal clinching the game for the Virginians.

The home club was without the services of its captain, Dereck Schoenfeld, and regular player Bob LeFevre, due to injuries. Hannon and Trimble bore the brunt of the losers' attack with 12 and 6 points, respectively.

George Pajak Out Rest of Year With A Fractured Arm

Georgetown University's worst fears concerning the seriousness of the injury George Pajak sustained in Thursday's basketball game with American University were realized yesterday when examination revealed the star forward has a fractured left arm. He will, of course, be lost for the balance of the season.

Pajak's loss is expected to greatly diminish the Hoyas' none-too-robust scoring attack, for the little junior had tallied 144 points and carried an average of almost ten per game.

Pajak's successor will be one of two sophomores, Jim Kiernan or Don Martin. Georgetown's next game is scheduled Wednesday at Tech gym against strong Penn State.

Woodward Beaten By Fork Union

Fork Union Military Academy junior cagers overcame a 7-4 deficit at the half to defeat Woodward School yesterday at the local Y. M. C. A., 20-12.

It was Woodward's third straight loss after winning its first four games of the season. Capt. Allen Prosise scored all but two points for the losers. In a preliminary Woodward juniors beat St. Alban's juniors, 23-19.

Georgetown Prep Rallies, Wins, 44 to 36

D. C. Five Puts Up a Fight in Last Period To Beat Deaf Team

Special Dispatch to The Post

Frederick, Md., Feb. 16.—A fighting band of basketers from Georgetown Prep, Washington, refused to be beaten here today, coming from behind in the final period of their game with Maryland School for the Deaf to take a 44-36 victory.

Trailing by 12-8, 21-16 and 32-29 as the first three quarters ended, the Little Hoyas pounded the hoop for 15 points in the last quarter while they held the hosts to four. Sport Barrett, high-scoring center, was the spark of the attack. In all he tallied 17 points for honors of the game, and many of his counters came in the crucial last quarter.

Rathstein, center of the home team, turned in 14 points in his team's futile effort. A lack of capable reserves spelled defeat for the Maryland school in the late stages. The invaders claimed their ninth triumph in 13 games as a result.

P. Waner Upset In Baseball Golf Tourney

Last Year's Finalist Beaten, 6-5, by Shea; Other Favorites Win

By the Associated Press

Tampa, Fla., Feb. 16.—Paul Waner, national baseball-golf champion in 1938 and finalist last year, was unceremoniously dumped out of the current tournament at Palma Ceia today in a first-round match. He lost, 6 and 5, to Marvin Shea, Detroit coach, without winning a single hole.

P. WANER

Otherwise, favorites paraded through their first matches and prepared for a double-header tomorrow, when quarterfinal and semifinal matches will be played. The 36-hole finals will be played Sunday.

Waner, rated by many as a sure bet to reach the semifinals, despite a dismal score in the medal round, offered no excuse for his one-sided defeat.

"I will say, however," he commented, "that the guy who told me Palma Ceia favored a left-handed golfer was all wet. I was in trouble on every hole of our match, either in a trap or in the rough. That doesn't mean that Shea didn't play good golf. He did, and I would have probably lost to him even on a good day."

Joe Medwick, the medalist, and Wes Ferrell, the defending champion, both advanced handily.

Paul Derringer, Cincinnati pitcher, who is another favorite, breezed through his match with Johnny Rizzo, big Pittsburgh outfielder, for a 4-and 3 victory. He played out the round in 75.

Jack Russell, Chicago pitcher, hit his stride in a match with Lloyd Brown, Newark pitcher, winning 5 and 4 in another minor upset. Brown had scored a 69 in the second 18 holes of the medal round.

Jimmy Foxx, powerhouse slugger of the Boston Red Sox, dropped Lloyd Waner, tiny Pittsburgh star, out of the championship flight by a 3 and 2 score. Foxx scored a 77, considered good golf over the trying Palma Ceia layout. As usual, he was hitting his tee shots a mile, but had trouble around the greens.

Schoolboy Rowe, giant Detroit pitcher, and Al Simmons, Philadelphia outfielder, completed the quarter final bracket.

'Rookie' Connie Mack Thrilled as Team Departs

He's a Pioneer of Training Trips but They Still Excite Him

By the United Press

Philadelphia, Feb. 16.—Connie Mack, a member of the Washington team when it inaugurated baseball's spring training trip 52 years ago, was as excited as the rawest rookie when his Philadelphia Athletics entrained tonight for their California base.

"Golly, it sure feels good!" the tall, gray-haired veteran said as he boarded the train.

The Grand Old Man of baseball, starting his fifty-seventh year in organized baseball at 77, was jubilant over the Athletics' 1940 prospects.

"Things look better," he said. "I expect a gradual improvement and the team should be a real contender by 1941."

Mack speaks of 1941 as if it were a week away. His dreams of "one more pennant" to add to those league titles he won in 1905, 1910, 1911, 1913, 1914, 1929, 1930 and 1931, and his five world championships, have been boosted by the acquisition of second Baseman Benny McCoy, expected to plug a gap which has been present in the Athletics' infield since the days of Max Bishop.

The team trains at Anaheim, Calif., and Connie happily anticipates a 42-game exhibition schedule which will take the club on a swing through the West, into Mexico and home by way of the South.

Connie Mack consults white elephant

"We'll give the boys plenty of work and they should be in fine shape by the time we reach home. Most of the boys are youngsters and what they need is plenty of work," he said.

The trip is as much of a thrill to Connie as his first spring training venture—the first ever attempted by a big league ball club.

He was one of 14 members of the Washington National League team on that pioneer training trip of 1888. The present president-manager of the A's was an aspiring catcher in those days, a lanky 6-foot 4-inch New Englander known to his mates as "Slats" McGillicuddy. Fans didn't take to his first name, Cornelius, and his last name was shortened eventually to Mack, so it would fit in the box score.

The 14 players were heading for Jacksonville, Fla., in what at that time was the height of luxury. There was a sleeping car with seven reservations for the Washington players—two to a berth. With Mack's surplus length in a berth with another player there wasn't any too much room, but it wasn't the confinement that kept him awake—it was the excitement.

And Connie probably will lie awake tonight, despite the fact that he now rates a full berth, for the fever is as high as it ever was.

Confiado, Chilean Veteran, Wins Hialeah Test by Length

$9.40 Shot An Eligible For Widener

Ken's Pop Finishes In Dead Heat With Gay Hour in Third; Calexico Gets Home

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 16.—Confiado, Chilean veteran from Isidore Bieber's barn, came through on the inside in the stretch to win the 7-furlong sixth race, a Grade "C" event that served as the feature offering on today's program. The Hirsch Jacobs-trained 7-year-old, only eligible for the $50,000 Widener Challenge Cup in the field of eight, responded willingly to Wayne Wright's urging and drove to the wire a length on top in 1:24 2-5.

Mrs. G. Spaeth's Marfeu was second by a half length, while DeWitt Page's Go Home took third money by a length and a half. B. F. Whitaker's Crepe, the favorite, was a laboring fourth after forcing the pace into the last furlong.

Confiado returned $9.40 for $2. The South American ran to his good New York form, showing marked improvement over his recent winter debut, when he finished last at the same distance.

Crepe Gets to Front

Crepe went to the front in short order but could not shake off Go Home. The pair raced heads apart to the stretch, where Go Home went wide. However, the Grandace gelding put Crepe away and gained a length lead. Then Confiado, outrun in the early stages, rallied along the rail and, after overtaking Go Home, held the dying bid of Marfeu under control.

The third race of a mile and furlong wound up in a dead heat between Ken's Pop, which finished on the inside, and Gay Hour. The former paid $5.90 straight, while Gay Hour's backers collected $6.10 for $2. Rose-Ouzel, favorite in the field of seven platers, finished third, a length and a half behind. Ken's Pop and Gay Hour wore down the fast-starting Gamester after 6 furlongs, then the pair put on a pretty duel to the wire, with noses bobbing at close range.

Calexico Makes Good

Calexico, with Eddie Arcaro on his back, easily made good for the many who backed him down to 9 to 10 in the 6-furong fifth race. Roy T., followed the choice home, four lengths back and a length better than Flying Up. Arcaro broke Calexico with the leaders, but did not make his move until leaving the back stretch.

Woodvale Lass, the heavily backed choice in the fourth event, at 6 furlongs, could not hold on to a daylight advantage and finished third in the field of six 3-year-old fillies. June Bee, a $12.40-for-$2 hazard, galloped off with the event by five lengths. Liberty Ann held a length and a half margin over Woodvale Lass.

Turf Stars Compete In 2 Big Races Today

Seabiscuit, Kayak II Heelfly Top Field In San Carlos 'Cap

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Feb. 16.—The big three of the Santa Anita Handicap lineup, Seabiscuit, Kayak II and Heelfly, go postward with ten other candidates tomorrow in the $10,000 added San Carlos Handicap unless bad weather sets in.

One of two remaining events for the stake division before the $100,000 handicap, March 2, the San Carlos will serve as an important test in the comeback plans of Charles S. Howard's Seabiscuit, as well as give a tightening race for Howard's Kayak II, George W. Stratton's reconditioned Heelfly and the rest of the eligibles.

Others named for the 7-furlong event were Ligaroti, Preceptor II, Can't Wait, Specify, Viscounty, Daybreak, Sun Egret, Arigotal, Lassitor and Our Mat.

Weather forecasts give a threat of rain, but it was believed the leading candidates would run unless there was a heavy downpour.

Kayak II, high weighted at 130 pounds, won the San Carlos in track record time last year. The event was a mile and one-sixteenth in 1939. Kayak II won the $100,000 handicap, too.

Seabiscuit, in at 127 pounds with the familiar Jockey Red Pollard slated to ride, will be making his second appearance of the meeting after having been on the shelf almost a year. He ran a good third to Heelfly and Sun Egret at 5 furlongs, February 9.

The San Carlos distance is hardly the preferred one for the two Howard aces, and Heelfly, too, likes a longer route, but all three need the race in preparation for the big 'cap.

Sir Damion Favored In $10,000 Feature At Hialeah Today

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Feb. 16.—Marshall Field's Sir Damion, second in the Widener Challenge Cup race last year, will head 19 entries in the $10,000 added McLennan Memorial at Hialeah Park tomorrow.

The smart field of 3-year-olds and up contains 18 candidates for this year's $50,000 added Widener event, the exception being J. Wormser's Rodin.

Sir Damion drew top weight of 122 pounds and will have Jockey Don Meade astride in an effort to overcome his poor 1940 showing with a victory in the important race. Sir Damion was second in the 1939 Widener to Bull Lea, then won the rich Dixie Handicap at Pimlico.

It will be the first start of the meet for Field's entry, after a layoff caused by recurrence last summer of an old leg ailment.

Weight of 118 pounds was assigned to the Le Mar Stock Farm's Many Stings, Maxwell Howard's highly regarded The Chief, and Calumet Farm's Easy Mon. Others scaled down to 103 pounds. Trainer Earl Sande, who saddled Stagehand, McLennan winner last year, now directs The Chief.

Technician from the Woolford Farm, winner of the Flamingo last year, will carry 120.

Missing from the list will be the mighty Challedon, declared out of the race by Owner William L. Brann because cold weather delayed his training schedule at Columbia, S. C.

The McLennan is run over a mile and one furlong distance. It was named in memory of Joe McLennan, Hialeah racing secretary until his death in 1933.

Jockey King Takes Bride, Capital Girl

Popular Steeplechase Rider, Mary Sullivan Announce Marriage

Seeds of a turf romance, planted under the ancient shade trees of Saratoga last summer and blossomed among the flying leaves at Laurel and Pimlico last fall, burst into full flower among the branches bare. Jockey Willie King and little Mary Sullivan were wed—he the well-known steeplechase rider and she the brother of Jockey Jimmy Sullivan, the Washington boy who was killed in a racing accident two years ago.

Surprising their friends and relatives, they slipped over to Arlington County Thursday night and had the knot tied by the Rev. Harry W. Craven.

King, well known to Maryland fans, is 27 years old and has been riding for more than ten years. A Danvers, Mass., boy, he served a short period as a flat rider before specializing in jumpers. During his career he has piloted the timbertoppers of many famous stables including those of Mrs. Dodge Sloane, Jock Whitney and Ambrose Clark. For Mrs. Sloane he won several stakes aboard National Anthem, his favorite among the many mounts he has ridden.

Daughter of Official

His bride is the daughter of James A. Sullivan, local A. A. U. official whose home is in Petworth. Her brother Pat is a former Golden Gloves boxing champion.

It was through the affiliation with the turf of the ill-fated Jimmy Sullivan, that Mary was to meet her husband. Last summer, Mary and Jimmy's widow went to Saratoga on vacation. There she met King and Kid Cupid was in the pilot house.

King has been kept busy this winter working horses at Laurel and on the old Ross farm track on the Washington-Baltimore boulevard. However, he is under contract to T. T. Mott, District sportsman, whose steeplechase horses are trained by Miss Judy Johnson. His work for the next two months will be confined to conditioning the jumpers of the Mott stable which include the stars, Spinach and Prattler.

Make Home Here

The tragic passing of Jockey Jimmy Sullivan is remembered by most turf followers. He accepted a mount in the last race at Agua Caliente, Mex., on February 7, 1938. Jockey Charley Rosengarten had been listed as the rider but had to leave early for Los Angeles. Coming into the stretch, Jimmy's mount stumbled and fell. He was rushed to the hospital but never regained conciousness.

Jockey Willie King and his bride will make their home here—but there will be Saratoga's shade, Laurel and Pimlico's falling leaves before each season ends and branches are bare.

Dear Al—It was a tough day for the Confucius followers. Jennie May, last all the way. But tomorrow's another day. I like that crack about Art Brown, WOL and Hedy Lemar, lots of WOW, on the same program at the Capitol Theater. Somebody says its the "Beauty and the Beast" combination. Marshall Field's Sir Damion carries top weight in the seventh running of the $10,000 added McLennan Memorial today with 122 pounds. Bull Lea, last year's Widener winner, was assigned 126 pounds, but the Warren Wright racer failed to stand training and was shipped back to the Calumet Farm in Lexington. Binglin Farm's Ra II, weighted at 122 pounds, is in California. Townsend B. Martin's Cravat, also listed at 122, is out because of an ailing foot. Sir Damion, second to Bull Lea in the 1939 Widener, has shown to excellent advantage in morning trials and looms one of the choices for the McLennan, which will bring out the principal candidates for the $50,000 added Widener to be run March 2. Maxwell Howard's The Chief, regarded by many as the real solid horse in both the McLennan and Widener, is in with 118. The same burdens have been allotted the Calumet Farm's Easy Mon and Leo Mark's Many Stings. The Harrington Stable's Olympus, recently purchased from the Belair Stud, carries 116 pounds. There were 78 nominations for the McLennan. Challedon was declared by Owner W. L. Brann and, therefore, was not weighted. Starters must pay $200 additional. This amount, together with the entrance fee of $25 for each horse, will go to the winning owner along with the Joseph E. Widener Challenge Trophy and a smaller replica of same. Despite the fact that the old boy's brother says he touts too much, Confucius say: Bailiwick will do the trick.
BILL.

First race—Maemante appears to be the speed of the party of juveniles scheduled to clash in the day's opener. Roberts will do the riding and I'm going to string along. Cadmium and General Jack seem to have something on the others.

Second race—Sparkling gets the call in this sprint field. Gets only a steadying 108 pounds and Durando will give up a good ride. Bunny Rabbit was a surprise winner recently and will be in there knocking. Settler is a possibility.

Third race—I'm going to give Affirmation one more chance. Eddie Arcaro will do the booting today and he could awaken this one. Couleedam and Sugarage will be ready to fight it out if I have overestimated the ability of the top pick.

Fourth race—Counterglow is the class of this field of 3-year-olds. Will like the 7 furlongs and appears capable of handling the 117-pound assignment. The Loom showed a fair effort last out. Tonganoxie for the minor award.

Fifth race—Domkin has developed since last fall and may be ready to carry speed over the 7-furlong route. With Robertson in the saddle this one will be assured good handling. At the weights, I prefer Domkin over the faint-hearted Charlieinfeld. Royal Man is fit and deserves attention.

SIXTH race—The Chief is the natural choice in the feature. He has been brought along gradually and his last indicates that he is at tops. Sir Damion will be a keen factor despite the high assignment. Many Stings has shown enough to warrant attention.

Seventh race—Braving Danger appears to be coming to himself again. That recent race was encouraging and I believe he is worthy of the choice here. Lady Bethyl and Glasby to fill out the money bracket.

Eighth race—Blanco Sweep is as fit as hands make horses and may gather another purse in this field. Erins Sun and Bailiwick for the place and show awards.

Best bet—Sparkling.

DARK MISCHIEF, away forwardly, took command under extreme pressure while racing greenly, shook off SIGNATOR in the last 20 yards and had nothing left at the end. CANFIELD displayed marked improvement over his previous races and finished with a belated rush. SIGNATOR faltered when the final test came. BONIFIED could not reach the leaders.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TETRATOWN, $11.80, $6.50, $4.80; PARI-ERNEST, $17.20, $10.30; CAR-ROU, $6.50.

TETRATOWN began fast, held the field safe for speed and rated in front, maintained his lead throughout the stretch under light pressure. PARI-ERNEST, strongly ridden all the way, gained steadily and outlasted CAR-ROU in the final drive. The latter, buffeted about in the early stages, finished with a rush when clear. WILDMUTE closed a big gap in the last quarter mile.

Daily Double, DARK MISCHIEF and TETRATOWN, Paid $40.40

KEN'S POP, a keen contender all the way, responded courageously when the final issue came. GAY HOUR, reserved off the early pace, moved up menacingly on the outside and headed the leader but faltered in the last strides to be dead heated. ROSE-OUZEL, rated off the leaders until straightened into the stretch, finished with a belated rush on the outside. GAMESTER quit in the last quarter mile.

Wheat Jumps 5 Cents in Last Ten Minutes

Explanations Are Various but Export Selling Is a Factor

the highest price since early in January and was within 5 cents of the two-year peak established in mid-December.

Wheat closed 3@4¾ higher than yesterday, May, $1.03½@1.04½; July, $1.01⅛@1.02. Corn was unchanged to ⅜ up; May, 56½; July, 57. Oats, ¼@½ higher; rye, 2@2¾ up and lard 2@5 higher.

Rye Follows Upturn

Traders searched the news for reasons for the outburst of buying but found little except for sale of 5,000,000 bushels of Canadian to Great Britain and the continent. A rally at Buenos Aires, which had been more than a cent lower, attracted attention inasmuch as an official Argentine crop report was expected later in the day. Some thought rumors about the war coming from abroad or Washington or about the loan program may have been heard but nothing of this nature was uncovered.

Early selling of wheat was associated with light precipitation in the domestic Southwest. Export business in United States Pacific Coast wheat to Vladivostok yesterday was reported at 2,500,000 bushels, at around 88 cents with no subsidy, and other reports indicated sales were as much as 15 cargoes the past two weeks to Russia and the Orient.

Other grains, particularly rye, followed the upturn of wheat. Handlers booked 45,000 bushels of corn to arrive and receipts were 129 cars with spot prices ½@¾ lower late in the day. Shippers sold 30,000 bushels of oats.

Lard rallied with grains.

Retail Sales Up for Year, Off for Week

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 16.—Retail buying at leading centers of distribution jogged along unevenly this week, some stores showing gains and others reporting slackened demand, Dun & Bradstreet reported today. While sales for the country as a whole were a shade under last week, volume ran 6 to 10 per cent above a year ago.

Sales in the South were 8 to 13 per cent above the like 1939 week; New England and the Middle West, up 6 to 12 per cent each; East, up 5 to 9 per cent; Northwest 5 to 7 per cent, and Southwest 3 to 7 per cent. The Pacific Coast was the only region with sales failing to top last year, volume there running 1 to 4 per cent under a year ago.

Leading Lines

"Consumer interest centered on furniture, glassware, yard goods, and apparel accessories," the Credit Agency said. "Although retailers complained that demand was somewhat less general than in the preceding week, with shoppers turning mainly to featured items, a number of stores showed an increase in total sales volume over the past week.

"Temperatures were still too low in most sections to encourage heavy purchasing of spring apparel. Men's furnishings and some lighter-weight clothing, however, sold in improved volume. Sales of furniture continued well ahead of last year, as did curtains, draperies, floor coverings and radios. In most house furnishings lines, there was increased stress on better grades. Wholesale turnover was 'modestly larger' than a year ago.

"Reorders on spring lines were trickling in steadily, but for fairly small quantities, as retailers held to a policy of ordering frequently and in moderate amounts," the agency said.

$17,990,000 Low Bid for Each of 2 New Cruisers

By the Associated Press

New York Shipbuilding Corporation, Camden, N. J., submitted to the Navy yesterday a low bid of $17,990,000 each on the construction and machinery of the newest light cruisers, the Columbia and Cleveland.

The Bethlehem Steel Co., Quincy, Mass., the only other bidder, asked $18,190,000 each. The Bethlehem firm bid $19,200,000 on the construction of a single ship, however, compared to $20,425,000 asked by the New York Shipbuilding Corporation for a single vessel.

All bids were subject to adjustments for changes in costs of material and labor during the construction period, estimated at 36 months for the first cruiser and 39 for the second.

The Columbia and Cleveland, 10,000-ton light cruisers, are the last warships to be undertaken with funds provided by Congress last session. Their designs were delayed so as to incorporate possible lessons from the European war.

The Navy estimated that guns, armor and ammunition would add $7,500,000 to the cost of each vessel. Officials estimated in advance that the hull and machinery of one cruiser would cost about $20,700,000 and the second about $18,350,000.

Balance to Be Allotted At Next Meeting of Bank's Directors

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Subscription rights enabling present stockholders of Second National Bank to purchase their pro rata share of new common stock to be issued in accordance with action of the annual meeting of bank's shareholders in January, expired yesterday.

More than 95 per cent of the stock was actually subscribed for, according to President John A. Reilly yesterday. The few remaining shares will be allotted by the board of directors of the banks at its next meeting. When the subscription is completed proceeds will be used to retire the remaining preferred stock.

Dr. Stonier to Address A. L. B.

Dr. Harold Stonier, New York, executive manager of the American Bankers Association, will be a speaker at the thirty-fifth annual banquet of Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, February 24, at the Willard Hotel. Dr. Stonier, in his capacity as national educational director of the American Institute of Banking, has addressed local banking groups on many occasions, and the banquet committee is very pleased at having him on the program.

Born in California, he studied at the College of the Pacific and University of California, receiving his doctor's and master's degrees at the latter institution. Subsequently, he took graduate work at the University of California and Columbia University. After several years of teaching and investment banking advertising work he became connected with the University of Southern California, organizing the extension work and alumni association of the university. During this period he also helped supervise the sources of Los Angeles Chapter, American Institute of Banking. From 1923 to 1927, Dr. Stonier, as vice president of the University of Southern California, was engaged in the general administrative work of the institution.

Educational Director

In 1927, he became national educational director of the American Institute of Banking, a position he still holds. He has been responsible for enlarging the curriculum of the institute and in the adoption of generally higher standards in its educational work. He also was prime mover in establishing the graduate school of banking at Rutgers University. In 1937, Dr. Stonier w as appointed executive manager of the American Bankers Association, and assumed the responsibilities of that office in addition to his institute duties.

Savings and Loan Conference

Frank W. Hancock, jr., of this city, member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, will be one of the speakers at the seventeenth annual midwinter conference of the American Savings and Loan Institute in Pittsburgh, February 22-23. He will talk on "Savings and Loan Management" at the opening session to be held at the Hotel William Penn. More than 500 executives of savings, building and loan associations will attend the conference coming from most of the States in the Union to this first national meeting of the $6,000,000,000 thrift and home financing business in 1940.

Chief emphasis of the meeting will be on the subjects of mortgage loan procedure and advertising and business development—a full afternoon being devoted to the latter and a full morning to the former. Members of the Washington chapter of the institute will attend this conference.

Other speakers at the conference will include George W. West, Atlanta, Ga., president of the United States Savings and Loan League; Morton Bodfish, Chicago, executive vice president of the league; Ralph H. Richards, president of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Pittsburgh; A. D. Theobald, Chicago, secretary-treasurer of the American Savings and Loan Institute and other nationally known figures.

Chain Store Volume Ahead of Year Ago

New York, Feb. 16.—Total chain store volume in January continued at a rate substantially ahead of the corresponding month of last year, reports the Chain Store Age today.

Combined average daily sales for 20 leading chain organizations regularly included in the Chain Store Age index were 5.5 per cent ahead of last year. The index for the month was 113.5 of the 1929-1931 average taken as 100, as compared with 107.5 in January, 1939. Seasonally, however, sales showed greater than normal decline from December levels, when the index was 120.

Copper and Steel Demand Aids Market; Russian Grain Purchases Also a Factor; N. Y. Traction Bonds Strong

New York, Feb. 16.—Firmness in copper and steel shares kept the stock market from ending at slightly lower levels today as other divisions showed fragmentary losses. Buying and covering late in the day lifted prices sharply with reports of large Russian purchases of American grain at Pacific Coast points and revival of Canadian exports the motivating influences. Gains ran from 3 to 4¾ cents a bushel. Cotton added 2 to 6 points also by virtue of late recovery.

Popularity of the copper shares was based on heavier sales to domestic and foreign consumers over the last week and a stiffening of prices. Refined copper as quoted by producers has been marked down from 12½ to 11¼ cents since the beginning of the year. Anaconda, appearing among the 15 most active issues of the day added more than a point and Kennecott went ahead about the same amount. Consolidated Coppermines at 8¾ was an active feature, up ⅛ at the close.

Steel Common Up

Steel common led the group's mild recovery with ⅜ point rise with Bethlehem and Republic, less active, also making some headway on the upside. News from Ohio producing centers indicated that output of steel products may show some further recession next week. At the same time the executive of one of the large companies was quoted as estimating first half of 1940 steel operations at between 60 to 70 per cent, always providing the United States obtains a fair share of export business. This view, incidentally, is much less optimistic than other recent forecasts.

Motors, which were off in early trading, came back promptly after publication of Ward's weekly assembly figures. Production since the first of the year, the agency said, was off less than seasonally.

Aircrafts were duller than usual. Traders in this section scrutinized Washington reports purporting to reveal mounting criticism of the enormous volume of Anglo-French aircraft purchases in this country on the ground they may delay national defense requirements.

An assortment of special issues became more active than usual, including New York Shipbuilding, Murray Corporation and Socony-Vacuum. The first of these was bought on new and bullish forecasts of the 1940 prospects of shipbuilding concerns. Unofficial forecasts on business of favorable character appearing locally may have accounted for interest in the other two.

N. Y. Traction Bonds Climb

Local traction bonds were whirled upward today in the listed market, on persistent rumors that sufficient B. M. T. obligations would be purchased by the city to effect unification. The market in general was dull, but Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit and Interborough issues were active and 1 to 6 points higher. Third Avenue bonds were better, as well. Turnover in all issues amounted to $6,850,000.

Speculative railroad bonds were quiet and mostly off by small fractions. The fare ruling on Eastern roads apparently had no effect on related bonds, for the list moved as a whole.

Finland 6s were fractionally lower on the Russian advance, while Scandinavian issues receded 1 to 2 points. Belgian and Italian bonds were well maintained, and some Japanese issues advanced sharply, apparently on sinking fund buying.

United States Treasury issues were idle, as dealers do not care to stock up in advance of a possible spring offensive in Europe's major war, and institutional buyers are awaiting terms of the March refunding operation.

Heavy Volume Of New Issues Taken in Week

New York, Feb. 16 (AP).—The money market this week successfully absorbed the largest volume of new security issues in six months, as immense reserves of idle funds provided an active demand for new offerings.

Public offerings of new securities during the week ended yesterday totaled $148,503,565 compared with $32,825,800 the previous week and $32,867,000 a year ago, Poor's Publishing Co. reported today. Bulking large in the total was a $98,500,000 refinancing program of New York City's Triborough Bridge Authority.

Despite the unusually high volume, however, demand for new capital continued small, accounting for only 7 per cent of the total. The remainder represented refunding of existing debts at lower rates of interest.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, Feb. 16.—Profit taking clipped stock market prices all along the line today. Support was at a minimum. British government bonds edged off and Far Eastern issues reclined in the foreign loan market. Domestic rails fluctuated erratically but were on the way down at the finish. Kaffirs moved against the general trend and rubbers held comparatively steady. Oils were droopy and industrials posted mixed changes.

Paris.—Bourse prices improved from start to finish today. The main exception was a 470-centime break in the dollar guaranteed 1937 rente issue. Ordinary rentes advanced up to 75 centimes. Gold issues were hesitant in the foreign group.

Amsterdam.—Domestic and foreign issues rounded out a quiet bourse session with small gains. Advances in domestic equities ranged to 2 points but aircrafts and steel were irregular in the American list.

Liverpool.—Cotton futures lost 2 to 8 points today. Liquidation in March was the major depressant.

Lack of Classy Field, Louisiana Cancels Derby

By the United Press

New Orleans, Feb. 16.—The nineteenth running of the $12,000 Louisiana Derby, set for March 3, was cancelled today because of lack of suitable entries.

"If we staged the Derby it would be an event with an ordinary field of horses unworthy of derby rating," said General Manager Robert S. Eddy, jr. "After much deliberation, the (Louisiana) Jockey Club decided to cancel this year's running."

Reds May Get Tucson Club, 7 Players and Bus for $500

Cincinnati Club Sends Representative 2,000 Miles to Inspect 7 Players, Motor Bus

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Feb. 16.—Just to be different, the National League Champion Reds sent their assistant general manager nearly 2,000 miles into the West today, to inspect seven ball players and a motor bus—and he could have 'em all for $500.

The seven players were all that remained of the Tucson, Ariz., club of the Class D Arizona-Texas League.

Seven others were dropped or otherwise scattered since a 1939 season in which the club finished last on both ends of a split season.

The motor bus was "good transportation," officials were told—and the deal was on.

Assistant General Manager Frank C. Lane, in charge of farm club operations, was expected to meet Sunday with H. S. Corbett, president of the Cowboy club, to close it.

The Reds are to pay $400 additional for a season's rent of the municipal ball park, in which, said officials here, a crowd of 200 or 300 probably is "something."

Addition of the Tucson club brings to eight the roster of Reds' farms. The list otherwise includes Indianapolis of the American Association and Bassett (Va.) of the Bi-State League, with both of which the Reds have working agreements; Birmingham, of the Southern Association, a recent acquisition; Columbia, S. C., Durham, N. C., Lenoir, N. C., and Ogden, Utah.

Approximately 190 players are on the combined minor club pay rolls.

Jimmy Karas, who took scoring honors for Western with 11 points, was the main cog in the serious portion of the game with his deadly "pot shots." His mate, Johnny Lumpkin, and Larry Hagan and Johnny Placos, of Anacostia, ran second in scoring with seven points each. It was the final regular-season game for both clubs.

Covert, the Golfers demanded the goal to be disallowed because Hemming had been charged. Both protests carried no weight and just before the end of the period Washington extended its lead to 3 to 0 as Covert followed up a shot by Davies.

Washington continued its brilliant play in the second period and assured the Golfers' defeat by running its advantage to 7-0. Evidence of the Eagles' fine teamwork is gleaned from the fact that these first seven goals were credited to as many different players.

talent that has come to the Nats from the high minors. The Nats paid the draft price of $6,000 for Gehrman to the Birmingham club and they gave Chattanooga $5,000 for Williams, who formerly had a long tryout with the Athletics. Both are right handers.

Hudson, the tallest player in camp, has by far the best record of any pitcher on the squad although it was achieved with Sanford last season in the class D Florida State League. The 6-foot-4-inch right hander won 24 games and lost only 4.

"I don't care what kind of a league he pitched in," said Harris today, "Anybody who can pitch that many victories is worth giving a long look at. If he can pitch a little bit, he'll be a help to this club."

Because Joe Stripp's baseball school will not close at Tinker Field until Sunday, the Nats are working out on a makeshift diamond at Exposition Park near the business center . . . The cameramen had the athletes performing in all manner of stunts for the traditional balogney pictures . . . And Big Elmer Gedeon, the big ten hurdles champion, who is now listed as an outfielder, was photographed taking a hurdle, of course . . . Buddy Lewis will report to the camp a week earlier than the rest of the veterans because Harris wants him to lose no time in trying his hand at outfielding . . . If Gedeon sticks with the squad the fastest man on the Nats will not be George Case, but Mr. Gedeon . . . Here at his own expense is a lad from Chicago named McAndrews who says he is a right-handed pitcher . . . Harris was no little pleased by the ten pounds Bucky Jacobs has added to his bony frame . . . He is of the opinion that young Jacobs who won 13 in a row for Springfield last season knows more about pitching than any newcomer to the team . . . Jimmy Wasdell made the claim that he uses the smallest first baseman's mitt in the league whereupon Bucky Harris told him to get a bigger one . . . "You haven't got the kind of reach that allows you to use a little mitt," said Harris, scanning Wasdell's 5 feet 10 inches.

baseman. With the exception of Ortiz they are all pea-green rookies from the Havana Amateur League who are destined for Washington's smaller farm teams.

Cambria bagged his newest Cubans on a scouting trip to Havana in January. Torres and Minsel he took a fancy to chiefly on account of their hitting in the Havana League. They played with the Cuban Electric Co. team, both batting better than .280. Their small size, however, does not recommend them as big league prospects.

Castro is the giant of the new lot, being a 6-foot 2-inch 195-pounder. Cambria touts him as the possessor of terrific speed. They will appear in uniform for the first time.

Ortiz, who is under a Charlotte contract, comes back to the Nats as an outfielder after a trial as a pitcher last season. Neither he nor the Nats' bosses any longer nurse the notion that Ortiz is a pitcher. The giant Cuban lad who was supposed to be "as fast as Walter Johnson" last season, wasn't.

Ortiz is virtually resigned to his lot as an outfielder. In his improved English he declared tonight: "I like to peetch better than I like to play outfield, but I can no peetch."

Ft. Hunt CCC Wins

Georgetown Mile Relay In Two Tests

Hilltop Four to Vie In N. Y. A. C. and Seton Hall Games

Georgetown University's undefeated mile relay team will seek fresh honors in two events within the next three days. Tonight the Hoya quartet bids for its fourth straight victory, competing in the N. Y. A. C. games at Madison Square Garden against Holy Cross and Pittsburgh. Monday they run in the Seton Hall games at Newark.

Maryland will have a lone representative in the N. Y. A. C. affair, Jim Kehoe who will run in the 880 against a strong field including Sanford Goldberg his conqueror in the Oriole 660 at Baltimore last week.

Georgetown's other entries in the N. Y. A. C. meet will be Al Blozis, in the 16-pound shot put, and Phil Graves and Vincent Carnevale in the mile. At Seton Hall Graves will run the mile, Jack Doolan the 60-yard dash and Jim Fish the 1,000-yard race.

Blozis, who came within one-half inch of the world's indoor record at Baltimore last Saturday when he tossed the shot 53 feet 1 inch, is expected to smash the mark tonight.

The Georgetown relay team which established a Fifth Armory record its last time out with an effort of 3:24 will be revised tonight because of an injury to George Tucknott, leadoff man. Tucknott, sidelined with a lame ankle, will be replaced by Johnny Motzenbecker. Otherwise the quartet will include Vinnie Braun, Ken Lyden and Morty Alnwick, with Charley Williams and Charley Neumeyer in reserve.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Speaking of luck, here is an extraordinary deal, submitted by H. S., of Washington. It was dealt, he says, at the Theta Delta Chi fraternity.

"On a night when freakish hands were in order, slams being frequent, pre-emptive bids keeping the opponents from game and slam contracts, I dealt myself the following hand:

♠ A K Q J
♣ A K Q

"You can imagine my surprise at holding this rarest of all hands. Almost speechless, I just managed to bid seven no trump. After this was passed around, I showed my hand without even waiting for the opening lead.

"It all happened on Monday, February 5, 1940, at the Theta Delta Chi fraternity house in Washington. We were playing rubber bridge, the stakes being two beers. The cards were properly shuffled and cut to produce the following hands:

	♠ 10 6 5 3 2 ♡ J 7 4 3 ◇ 9 3 ♣ 5 2
♠ 4 ♡ 10 8 6 ◇ J 10 6 4 2 ♣ 8 7 6 3	NORTH WEST EAST SOUTH ♠ A K Q J ♡ A K Q ◇ A K Q ♣ A K Q	♠ 9 7 6 ♡ 9 5 2 ◇ 8 7 5 ♣ J 10 9 4

The bidding, North-South vulnerable, South dealer:

South	West	North	East
7 NT.	Pass	Pass	Pass

Score: 2,570 points.

"There were about 20 people in the house when I had this hand, and excitement ran high for the next half-hour. One of my fraternity brothers took a picture of me holding the cards. If it turns out all right I shall be glad to send you a copy."

You're sure, H. S., you didn't see one of your fraternity brothers hob-nobbing with a member of the Society of American Magicians just before the bridge game, aren't you?

Life is earnest and life is real these days for poor old Arch McDonald. A cruel and unreasonable sponsor, who because he pays a little money for Arch's WJSV sports review feels he owns the McDonald soul, had ordered "The Pine Tree" to go to Orlando, Fla., and get some dope on the Senators.

Arch must tear himself away from his family and friends and away from our cool, brisk air and sit around in the unhealthy heat of Orlando. But it's a beautiful picture to watch him as he goes about his daily chores, laughing and whistling gayly despite the fierce and unexpected blow by fate.

Sound effects has its angles: Chicago C. B. S. Mystery as to who has been sending home-made pies to Carlton KaDell, of C. B. S.'s "Right to Happiness," was solved when he broke down and admitted they were from his sister in California . . . . "I Take This Man"

BY ANNE TEDLOCK BROOKS

Characters:

Brenda Holliway—Young artist, who is battling her way to the top in a large advertising agency.

Lynne Winship—Wife of Cary.

Brenda has suddenly discovered that she is infatuated with Cary and this is bordering on love. Compelled by a rush order to work late at night, she and Cary go out for dinner and their friendship increases.

Chapter 2

NOW, WHEN she should be happy and gay, all that she felt was just a queer mixture of despair and anger at herself for feeling anything at all. Right now the thing she needed most was to slip into her blue pajamas and curl up in bed.

When the food came she ate it hungrily, saying: "I hadn't dreamed it would taste so good."

"Glad we came, then! As a matter of fact, I haven't eaten either. Lynne went out this evening and I took a glass of milk and a sandwich on a tray in my room."

He said it casually, as though it were the sort of thing he was accustomed to doing.

"Jeff Adams and his crowd were having a supper party tonight and I decided I couldn't take it. Lynne seems to enjoy them, so I insisted that she go on."

Lynne and Jeffrey Adams! She remembered seeing them together a few times, but had thought nothing of it, as Cary was always somewhere in the crowd. But Cary was talking on as though he approved it and that there was nothing wrong for his wife to be going about with another man.

Brenda felt a little dizzy suddenly and thought what a perfectly crazy thing the world was anyway, with such grand people as the Winships taking chances to upset their happiness and with herself in love with a man who could never mean anything to her! And then the stupefying idea that, after all, he might!

By the Fireside

She was gay the rest of the way to her apartment. She glanced at her watch as he took her into the foyer. "It's not so late; do you want to see those sketches I have here?"

He took her to the elevator. "Do you mean to tell me that you've been working at home, too?"

"Of course! How did you ever think I'd get 'em finished in time if I didn't?" She handed him her key and he opened the door.

The maid had left the apartment in shining order and Brenda was proud of the interior she had achieved with the window treatment, modernistic furnishings and the mirroring effect.

"Your place is charming, Brenda. I like it for its simplicity and its hospitable atmosphere."

She seated him near the fireplace and lit the gas logs, then she hurried into her studio to get her sketches.

"You ought to go to bed and I should be shot for coming in, but I am anxious to see these," he said, as he took the heavy drawing paper.

She sat down on the big ottoman while he studied them carefully. She wore a bright red woolen dress tonight, and the color brought out the vividness of her features.

Cary glanced over at her suddenly and surprised her penetrating study of him. What a picture she made! he thought.

"These are great! Splendid in every detail." He got to his feet hurriedly. "I must be going." He handed the papers back to her and she gave him his hat. She crossed the room and held the door open, smiling at him. Suddenly Cary saw in her eyes her secret. The knowledge that she loved him shook him strangely.

"Thank you for bringing me home and thanks for the supper." Cary looked at her steadily and as the color rose in her cheeks his heart pounded. In another moment he was gone and only the white doorway as it swung after him was there.

Happy Days for Brenda

The next week he took her out for lunch one noon and the rest of the day was so happy for Brenda that it showed in her eyes. The next week they went out again and, although it was a thing they had done many times before, it now held a new meaning for her.

One evening they stayed at the office, ordering their supper from the delicatessen around the corner, and worked on into the night. It was late when they finally stopped and Brenda did not even feel the fatigue she should have known.

"Tired?" he asked gently as they drove along the street.

"Not at all!" They stopped for sandwiches and coffee and Brenda felt happy and excited.

While they were on their way to her apartment, he said, suddenly: "Lynne and I are having a house party next week-end out at the house on the island. We would like awfully for you to come?"

He looked at her sitting beside him in the shadow, with only the slanting light of a stray moonbeam touching her face. "You will, won't you?" At once he knew he wanted her to come. More than anything at the moment, he desired to take her in his arms.

"Of course, I will, if you want me." She tried to still her trembling.

"Then it's settled," he said.

She pushed her hands down hard on her lap and dared not open her lips. To be near him a whole week-end!

She felt a panicky desire for him to leave her at the elevator, but he accompanied her to her door. Outside of it, she held the key out to him again, as she had on that other night.

He opened it again and said: "Good night; I won't come in." Cary's face was grim. His voice harsh. He knew it had become dangerous for him to be alone with her.

Tears on Her Pillow

Brenda cried and cried until her pillow was damp, and she turned it over and fell asleep. "I can't go," she told herself. "That is too much. I can't be near him a whole week-end and not let him know my secret," never guessing he already knew it!

But she was not to turn away Lynne's insistent invitation the next day. "Brenda, you simply have to come. I have an extra man, and I can't do that and have my party a success!"

"All right, Mrs. Winship, I'll come." Brenda hoped that her voice didn't sound as dispirited over the wires as it did to her own ears.

She knew enough about the Winships' parties that she went shopping for this particular one. There would be imported gowns, there would be subtle perfumes, gorgeous furs and jewels.

The weather was perfect, and the big car bearing Lynne and the extra man and Brenda and Cary rolled up to the house emblazoned with lights.

At dinner Brenda discovered that Jeff was there, securely in the company of a rather uninteresting creature who did not seem to mind Jeff's lack of devotions.

The man for whom Brenda was invited was trying to explain the latest move by the Regional Board for the Protection of—— She never afterward could remember what it was they were going to protect, for Cary stiffly reserved and a study in black and white, had thrown her a look that she kept trying to interpret. She dropped her eyes and then recovered quickly.

The First Kiss

It seemed they were going out for a while to another party, and the women went for their wraps. With much confusion in getting away, Jeff and the hostess were in one car, and the extra man was with the girl Jeff had brought, and, with a sigh, Brenda sank back into the cushions of Cary's car.

"Do you mind it so much, then?" he asked, teasingly.

Before he stepped on the starter Cary leaned over and pressed her hands, just before the light of the last car swept over them.

They turned out of the drive behind it, and Cary drove slowly. Soon the little red light in front of them disappeared and he turned the car off into the road that followed along the lake shore.

He stopped the motor and said: "Brenda!" He took her in his arms. His kiss was overwhelmingly sweet and Brenda caught her breath in a

"I had to kiss you, Brenda. Please don't be sorry," he said. Brenda wished the world would stop. To be in Cary's arms was better than life. But what could his love bring to her? Stolen kisses, haunted hours?

BRENDA HOLLIWAY remembered the evening that followed as one of great confusion, in which it seemed nothing mattered but gayety and wit which slowly became fuddled and slightly maudlin as the hour passed midnight. But this night was to change her life completely.

This kind of party was too new for her to enter into it completely. The sound of feminine voices became unbeautiful after too many cocktails. The male voices became slightly thickened and some decidedly amorous.

Carey, she noticed with watchfulness, drank but little the first part of the evening, and none at all the latter. He forced himself to jest with the others. But about 2 o'clock he went to his wife and said something in a low voice.

Lynne was so beautiful that Brenda, watching them, caught her breath sharply, Lynne's golden hair was dressed high, each curl lustrerful and shining in the lights, her lovely body arrogantly displayed in the satin of her gown. Each movement of her hands, every detail of her grooming said to the world: "Here is a woman that time will never touch." Branda wondered how she could go on and on with the parties that she attended and retain her beauty. And as loyally she told herself that Lynne had known this life always. To herself alone in all of the crowd did this seem unreal and unnatural.

New Arrival

As Cary and Lynne stood talking together there was a ring of the chimes announcing a late arrival. All eyes turned to the door as the butler preceded him into the room.

"Alan!" some one shrieked.

There was a feminine rush for the door. Then some of the men followed and Brenda saw towering above the heads of all of the rest a man with the sunburned hair of one who has spent many days under the tropical sun. His skin was more than tanned. And his eyes held the intensity of the blue seas which he had sailed recently. It was Alan Tremaine, she knew instantly. Only once before had she ever seen him, and that was when she had first come to the city.

He was carried forward into the room with the surge of the demanding girls—demands for stories to be told about his recent travels.

As he separated himself from their clinging for a moment long enough to shake hands with the men, Brenda saw that he was tall and athletic looking, and that his age was past 30.

Lynne and Cary Winship smiled their welcome and she could tell easily that they were the most favored of all Alan Tremaine's acquaintances in the room.

She alone in all the place seemed to be the only one who did not know him.

The hostess took care of that presently by saying, "Alan, we have with us tonight that famous artist, Brenda Holliway."

Brenda felt the color flame her face at the ambiguous introduction. But Alan Tremaine held out his long, tanned hand, and Brenda found his blue eyes deeply searching.

After a half hour's rapid-fire talking she felt his eyes upon her.

"Can't we get away from all the noise?" his lips were framing. "It's very disturbing. I came to get Pixie, but I see she's being well taken care of."

Brenda's eyes followed his to Pixie Tremaine, his sister, who was so animated in conversation that she had failed to attend her brother's arrival. Her companion of the moment was Count von Heron.

Cary seemed to be busy with Lynne, but his eyes gave Brenda permission, when she asked to be excused for the evening.

She went immediately for her wrap and together they made their departure, Alan under protest from the girls.

New Friendship

The night had grown cool, and Brenda inadvertently breathed deeply in the sweetness of the fresh air. Alan laughed and said, "Me, too!" And took a great chest-raising draught.

"You're visiting at the Winships with the rest of the house party?" he asked.

"Yes. Mrs. Winship begged me to come, and I could not refuse her. I'm afraid it's slightly over my depth, though."

"It's a case of sink or swim along with the rest, these days. I come home and stand it just so long, then I have to get out of it again."

"I've heard a lot about you from the Winships."

"Mining engineer in Brazil! Pixie shudders every time I tell anyone. It's as if she's ashamed of having a brother who makes an honest living!"

They laughed together and walked slowly away from the house to the row of parked cars, and Alan helped her into the one nearest the entrance. It was beautifully built, a foreign car, with deep, luxurious cushions.

As they rolled down the moonlit drive, Brenda remembered things she had heard about Alan. He had gone away after college, finding passage on a slow freighter, and made his own way in a mining camp in the Andes. He refused to enter, as an executive, the steel mills where his father had amassed his great fortune back home. He was an outcast at first. To run away from wealth and leisure was unheard of among his friends and associates. But in three years he was back in New York on a vacation from the finest position in the whole of South America. Incredibly handsome and incredibly assured. He stayed three months and then, finding time too heavy on his hands, went back. And going, had left a trail of broken hearts, so the Winships said. But it was hard to believe that he would deliberately hurt any one.

Lynne had told her, Brenda remembered, that the real reason why Alan Tremaine went to South America in the first place was because of his own broken heart, and now Brenda wondered if it had ever become whole again. Margot Alexander had given him back his ring after a stormy scene at a country club dance.

Marshall Sees 'Midget' Army World Model

Chief of Staff Says 'Highest Standard' Soon Will Be Reached

America is well on the way to possessing a "midget" Army that will be a model for the world, Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of Staff, said last night in a radio address, presented in the National Defense Week program sponsored by the Reserve Officers' Association.

Gen. Marshall spoke a few minutes before the annual dinner of the association's national council at the Hotel Washington, attended by more than 300 reserve officers, members of Congress, Army officials and other guests.

He declared the 17,000 men added to the Regular Army by Presidential order last fall will provide sufficient strength for the maintenance of one complete Army corps and a mechanized brigade.

"This is but a midget force by European standards," said Gen. Marshall, "but by the end of May it will be a model force comparable to the highest standards of any army."

Secretary of War Woodring told the association that the fate of Czecho-Slovakia and Albania, and the obliteration of Poland were a warning to America to put its defensive household in order.

"We Americans are confronted with the stark reality that Mars now stalks the earth," Woodring said.

"The duration, the violence and the final extent of the (European) conflict can, at this hour, be foretold by no man; those considerations lie within the province of the historian of the future.

"It behooves us, however, so to set our American defensive household in order, so that no historian of the future will have cause to relate that the extinguishment of American liberty and American democracy began with the wars of 1939."

To that task, he said, the Government has set "a vigorous hand.

Outlining recent moves to "mend the gaps in our military fences," the Secretary called for a more realistic conception of the Reserve officers role in event of war.

In its earlier sessions, the council had discussed whether Reserve officers, in event of war, would form a pool for the Regular Army or would serve in the units with which they had received peacetime training. On this point Woodring said that "so far as practicable, it is our intention to take full advantage of those manifest benefits which accrue from the maintenance of Reserve units," but he added that under attack, Reserve might be required to fill gaps in the officers rolls for the initial protective force.

Chairman Snyder, of the House subcommittee on War Department appropriations, credited the Reserve officers with helping to arouse public opinion to the belief that "our best safeguard for peace is a complete and efficient defense establishment."

Others speakers included Chairman May of the House Military Affairs Committee; Senator Minton (Democrat), of Indiana, and Col. Edward S. Bres, president of the association. Maj. Norman A. Imrie, of Columbus, Ohio, was toastmaster. Earlier the council members conferred with members of Congress, and in the afternoon attended a cavalry drill at Fort Myer. They will hear committee reports at this morning's session.

Children Thrill to Last of Symphony Series

Thirteen hundred children sat raptly through yesterday's student concert by the National Symphony Orchestra, then shouted for more when Assistant Conductor Francis Garzia's baton fell with the last note. Right — Dorothy Olmstead, 9, of the Bryan School, who has heard about the French horn and how the music goes 'round and 'round, looks to see where it comes out as Van Lier Lanning plays. The concert in Eastern High School auditorium was the last in this season's series to illustrate the theme, "How the Symphony Grew"

Ways Minority Opposes Hull On Trade Pacts

Program Called Unconstitutional, Not in U. S. Interest

Republican members of the House Ways and Means Committee recommended yesterday that the reciprocal trade agreements program be abandoned, and an independent agency set up instead to promote foreign trade by "constitutional" methods.

In a minority report on the pending resolution to extend the program three years, the ten Republican committee members charged that the agreements were now executed in "secret star chamber proceedings" to the detriment of the national economy. If the program is to be continued, they said, Congress should be permitted to pass on the individual compacts.

The House begins consideration Monday of the resolution reported favorably by the Democratic majority of the committee.

The Republican report reached three conclusions:

The program has not accomplished its primary purpose of expanding foreign markets, or its secondary purpose of promoting world peace.

It has not been administered in the national interests.

It should not be continued in its present form in the face of present and prospective world conditions.

The report was signed by Representatives Treadway, Massachusetts; Crowther and Reed, New York; Knutson, Minnesota; Woodruff, Michigan; Jenkins, Ohio; McLean, New Jersey; Gearhart, California; Carlson, Kansas, and Jarrett, Pennsylvania.

The ten said that they would not oppose "a proper policy of reciprocity under more normal conditions," but they declared the present program had resulted in "bureaucratic tariff-making" by "self-anointed experts," who do the actual negotiating.

Moreover, they said, the program is an unconstitutional delegation of Congressional authority.

French License For War Goods Sets New High

January Permits Call for U. S. Exports Of $81,572,301

France obtained export licenses for $81,572,301 worth of war materials in January, the highest total to one nation since the license system was instituted.

The State Department's monthly report of licenses disclosed yesterday that airplane engines accounted for $56,801,199 of this total. Fighting planes made up $17,154,091.

Great Britain's licenses amounted to $906,359, Australia's to $400,328, and Canada's to $323,378.

The Scandinavion countries were purchasers of American war equipment. Norway obtained licenses totaling $721,300, mostly for fighting planes; and Sweden, $612,000, mostly for airplane engines. Finland was granted licenses for $169,253 worth of ammunition.

Exports to Finland in January were $774,260, mostly fighting planes, and to Sweden $967,490, fighting planes and airplane parts.

Great Britain obtained deliveries in January totaling $4,063,198, mostly of fighting planes. Canada's were $535,383, largely of fighting planes, and Australia's were $3,311,305, almost entirely of fighting planes.

Turkey got exports of $1,252,347, three-fourths of which were warplanes.

The total licenses for export granted in January were $86,096,775, and actual exports were $23,556,733.

Pastor Urges Christian Tasks At Lenten Rite

Dr. Anderson Asks Noonday Listeners For Self-Sacrifices

An appeal for "heroic and self-sacrificial Christian living" in the modern day was voiced yesterday by Dr. Howard Stone Anderson, pastor of First Congregational Church.

In a message delivered at the daily noonday Lenten services of Southeast churches at the Penn Theater, he said spiritual power was the greatest power in life, and he urged his listeners to find opportunities for Christian service in every-day tasks. The Rev. Edward Gabler, rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Navy Yard, introduced him. The choristers of that church sang.

The Right Rev. Robert E. L. Strider, Bishop of West Virginia, yesterday concluded his series of noonday addresses at Epiphany Episcopal Church. The Very Rev. Chester B. Emerson, D. D., dean of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, will preach during the coming week, Monday through Friday, at 12:05 noon.

Dr. Frederick Holloway, president of Western Maryland College, Westminster, Md., has been invited to address the weekly Lenten services of Chevy Chase Protestant congregations this Thursday at 8 p. m. at Chevy Chase Baptist Church.

Dr. William S. Abernethy, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, and president of the Washington Ministerial Association, will speak at the weekly union Lenten rites of the Washington Federation of Churches this Wednesday at 4:45 p. m. at Epiphany Church.

Jurors Disagree, Are Discharged In A. F. G. E. Suit

The $200,000 damage suit of the American Federation of Government Employes against the National Federation of Federal Employes was back yesterday to where it started two weeks ago, when Justice T. Alan Goldsborough found the District Court jurors in hopeless disagreement and discharged them.

The controversy began three years ago, when the A. F. G. E., an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, and the N. F. F. E., in independent organization, were competing to enroll Government workers here. The N. F. F. E. official organ, The Federal Employe, said in an editorial that the rival union had introduced sit-down strikes and other private labor dispute tactics into the Government service.

The A. F. G. E. denied this and sued for $200,000. The case is due to be scheduled for another trial in a few weeks.

House Liberals Seek Program To Boost Jobs Without Relief

An unofficial committee to study the unemployment problem is being formed by a group of House liberals, The Post learned yesterday.

Designated the "nonpartisan unemployment bloc," the committee will be headed, it is understood, by Representative Voorhis (Democrat), of California. After its formal organization next week, the group will hold hearings at which experts on the unemployment problem from both Government and private life will present their views.

"We want to bring together members from all parties," spokesman said last night. "We want to try to reach an agreement on a legislative program to assist employment, which is the greatest problem facing America. In all the excitement over the European situation, we want the people to know that many members of Congress are still interested in unemployment."

"This new group," he added, "which is not identical with the so-called 'liberal bloc,' intends to try to work out a positive plan to meet this problem, not merely an increase in the relief appropriation. We realize that increasing WPA funds is simply a palliative which utterly fails to go to the root of the question."

At the same time, the "liberal bloc" continues to hold weekly dinners at which speakers include such New Deal "insiders" as Lauchlin Currie, administrative assistant to the President, and Benjamin V. Cohen, of the National Power Policy Committee.

It is understood that some of the speakers at these gatherings have sounded a warning that another recession is to be expected next year if the present economy wave is continued. The "liberals" have been advised to fight against any further economies or alterations in such New Deal laws as the Wagner Act rather than to expend their energies on new legislation.
